Why I am an Atheist

By BHAGAT SINGH

A new question has cropped up. Is it due to vanity that I do not believe in the existence of an omnipotent, omnipresent and omniscient God? I had never imagined that I would ever have to confront such a question. But conversation with some friends has given me a hint that certain of my friends—if I am not claiming too much in thinking them to be so—are inclined to conclude from the brief contact they have had with me, that it was too much on my part to deny the existence of God and that there was a certain amount of vanity that actuated my disbelief. Well, the problem is a serious one. I do not boast to be quite above these human traits. I am a man and nothing more. None can claim to be more. I also have this weakness in me. Vanity does form a part of my nature. Amongst my comrades I was called an autocrat. Even my friend Mr. B. K. Dutt sometimes called me so. On certain occasions I was decried as a despot. Some friends do complain and very seriously too that I involuntarily thrust my opinions upon others and get my proposals accepted. That this is true up to a certain extent, I do not deny. This may amount to egotism. There is vanity in me inasmuch as our cult as opposed to other popular creeds is concerned. But that is not personal. It may be, it is only legitimate pride in our cult and does not amount to vanity. Vanity or to be more precise "Akankar" is the excess of undue pride in one's self. Whether it is such an undue pride that has led me to atheism or whether it is a very careful study of the subject and after much consideration that I have come to disbelieve in God, is a question that I intend to discuss here. Let me first make it clear that egotism and vanity are two different things.

In the first place, I have altogether failed to comprehend as to how undue pride or vaingloriousness could ever stand in the way of a man in believing in God. I can refuse to recognize the greatness of a really great man provided I have also achieved a certain amount of popularity without deserving it or without having possessed the qualities really essential or indispensable for the same purpose. That much is conceivable. But in what way can a man believing in God cease believing due to his personal vanity? There are only two ways. The man should either begin to think himself a rival of God or he may begin to believe himself to be God. In neither case can he become a genuine atheist. In the first case he does not even deny the existence of his rival. In the second case as well he admits the existence of a conscious being behind the screen guiding all the movements of nature. It is of no importance to us whether he thinks himself to be that supreme being or whether he thinks the supreme conscious being to be somebody apart from himself. The fundamental is there. His belief is there. He is by no means an atheist. Well, here I am. I neither belong to the first category nor to the second. I deny the very existence of that Almighty Supreme being. Why I deny it shall be dealt with later on. Here I want to clear one thing, that it is not vanity that has actuated me to adopt the doctrines of atheism. I am neither a rival nor an incarnation nor the Supreme Being Himself. One point is decided, that it is not vanity that has led me to this mode of thinking. Let me examine the facts to disprove this allegation. According to these friends of mine I have grown vainglorious perhaps due to the undue popularity gained during the trials—both Delhi Bomb and Lahore conspiracy cases. Well, let us see if their premises are correct. My atheism is not of so recent origin. I had stopped believing in God when I was an obscure young man, of whose existence my above mentioned friends were not even aware. At least a college student cannot cherish any sort of undue pride which may lead him to atheism. Though a favourite with some professors and disliked by certain others, I was never an industrious or a studious boy. I could not get any chance of indulging to such feelings as vanity. I was rather a boy with a very shy nature, who had certain pessimistic dispositions about the future career. And in those days, I was not a perfect atheist. My grand-father under whose influence I was brought up is an orthodox Arya Samajist. An Arya Samajist is anything but an atheist. After finishing my primary education I joined the D. A. V. School of Lahore and stayed in its Boarding House for full one year. There with the Police officials I guessed that they had some information regarding my connexion with the Kaki Party and my other activities in connexion with the revolutionary movement. It is well known that I had been taken to Lucknow while the trial was going on there, that I had negotiated certain schemes about their rescue, that after obtaining their approval we had procured some bombs, that by way of test one of the bombs was thrown in the reception of the Damascus Congress. It seems that they further informed me, in my interest, that I could give any statement throwing some light on the activities of the revolutionary party, I was not to be imprisoned but on the contrary set free and rewarded even without being produced as an accused in the Court. I laughed at the proposal. It was all humbug. People holding ideas like ours do not throw bombs on their own innocent people. One fine morning Mr. Newman, the then Senior Superintendent of C.I.D., came to me. And after much sympathetic talk with me I imparted to him—the extremely sad news that if I did not give any statement as demanded by them, they would be forced to send me up for trial for conspiracy to wage war in connexion with Kaki Case and for brutal murders in connexion with Dusshehra Bomb outrage. And he gave me an assurance that he would be very glad to get me convicted and hanged. In those days I believed—though I was quite innocent—the police could do it if they desired. That very day certain police officials began to persuade me to offer my prayers to God regularly both the times. Now I was an atheist. I wanted to settle for myself whether it was in the days of law and order alone that I could boast of being an atheist or during that ghastly war, times as well I could stick to those principles of mine. After great consideration I decided that I could not lead myself to believe in and pray to God. No, I never did. That was the real test of my success. Never for a moment did I desire to save my neck at the cost of certain other things. So I was a staunch disbeliever; and have ever since been. It was not an easy job to stand that test. 'Belief' seduces the hardships, even can make them pleasant. In God man can find very strong consolation and support. Without it he finds himself alone to stand upon one's own legs amid storms and hurricanes is not a child's play. At such testing moments, vanity—if any—evaporates, and man cannot dare to defy the general beliefs. If he does, then he must conclude that he has got certain other strength then mere vanity. This is exactly the situation now. Judgment is already too well known. Within a week it is to be pronounced. What is the consolation with the exception of the idea that I am going to sacrifice my life for a cause? A God-believing Hindu might be expecting to be reborn as a king, a Muslim or a Christian might dream of the luxuries to be enjoyed in paradise and have such rewards for his sufferings and sorrows. But what am I to expect? I know the moment the rope is fitted round my neck and rafter removed, from under my feet, that will be the final moment—that will be the last moment. I, or to be more correct, the work that remains to be done by me, as far as physical termination, shall all be finished there. Nothing further. A short list of struggles with no such magnificent end, shall in itself be the reward if I have the courage to take it in that light. That is all. With no selfish motive, or desire to be awarded here or hereafter, quite disinterested single-minded purpose, I seek the cause of independence, because I could not do otherwise. The day we find a great number of men and women with this psychology who cannot devote themselves to anything else than the service of mankind and emancipation of the suffering humanity, that day shall inaugurate the era of liberty. Not to become a king, nor to gain any other rewards here, or in the next birth or after death in paradise, shall they be inspired to challenge the oppressors, exploiters, and tyrants, but to restore the yoke of servitude, and make humanity and to establish liberty and peace shall they treat this—to their individual selves perilous and to their noble selves the only glorious imaginary—path. Is the pride in noble cause to be misinterpreted as vanity? Who dares to utter such an absurdity? To him I say either he is a fool or a knave. Let us forgive him for he cannot realize the depth, the emotion, the sentiment and the noble feelings that surge in that heart. His heart is dead as a mere lump of flesh, his eyes are weak, the evils of other interests having been his constant care. The great leader has always to be interpreted as vanity; it is sad and miserable but there is no help.

You go on and oppose the prevailing faith. you go on and criticize a hero, a great man, who is generally disbelieved because he is thought to be infallible. The strength of your argument shall force the multitudes to decry you as vainglorious. This is due to the mental stagnation. Criticism and independent thinking are the two indispensable qualities of a revolutionary. Because Mahatma is great, therefore one should not believe that he has done everything. Therefore everything he says—may be in the field of Politics or Religion, Economics or Ethics—is right. Whether you are convinced or not you must say, "Yes; that's true". This mentality does not lead towards progress. It is rather too obviously reactionary.

Because our forefathers had set up a faith in some supreme being—the Almightly God—therefore any man who dares to challenge the validity of that faith, or the very existence of that supreme being, he shall be called an apostate, a renegade. If his arguments are too sound to be refuted by counter-arguments and spirit too strong to be cowed down by the threat of misfortunes that may befall him by the wrath of the Almighty—he shall be derided as vainglorious, his spirit to be dismissed as vanity. Then why waste time in this vain discussion? Why try to argue out the whole truth? This question is coming before the public for the first time, and is being handled in this matter of fact for the first time, hence this lengthy discussion.

As for the first question, I think I have cleared that it is not vanity that has led me to atheism. My way of argument has proved to be convincing or not; that is to be judged by my readers, not me. I know in the present circumstances my faith in God would have made my life easier, my burden lighter and my disbelief in Him has turned all the circumstances too dry and the situation may assume too harsh a shape. A little bit of mysticism can make it poetical. But I do not want to be given to illusion to meet my face. I am real. I have been trying to overcome the instinct in me by the help of reason. I have not been always successful in achieving this end. But man's duty is to try and endeavour success depends upon chance and environment.

As for the second question that it was not vanity, then there ought to be some reason to disbelieve the old and still prevailing faith of the existence of God. "Yes, I believe that the god I know is not true."

Reason there is. According to me, any man who has got some reasoning power at his command always tries to reason out his environment.

Where direct proofs are lacking, philosophy occupies the important place. As I have already stated, a certain revolutionary friend used to say that philosophy is the outcome of human weakness. He made a profound statement! how profound! Enough to try to solve out the mystery of this world, I must first, present the future, its whys and wherefores, they have been terribly short of direct proofs, everybody tried to solve the problem in his own way. Hence we find the wide differences in the fundamentals of various religious creeds, which sometimes assume very antagonistic and conflictive shapes. Not only the Oriental and Occidental philosophies differ, there are differences even among various schools of thoughts in each hemisphere. Amongst Oriental religions, the Moslem faith is not at all compatible with Hindu faith. In India itself, Buddhism, Jainism, and Tamilism are sometimes quite separate from Brahmanism, in which there are again conflicting faiths as Arya Satya and Satyanara Dharma. Charak is still another independent thinker of the past ages. He challenged the authority of God in the old times. All these creeds differ from each other on the fundamental question: what he considers himself to be on the right. There lies the misfortune. Instead of using the experiments and expressions of the ancient Savants and thinkers as a basis for our future struggle against ignorance and to try and find out a solution to this dangerous problem, we are vehemently, as we have proved to be, the base and the cry of faith, unlearning and unwavering faith in their versions and thus are guilty of stagnation in human progress.

Any man who stands for progress has to criticize, disbelieve and challenge every item of the old faith. To do by item he has to reason out every nook and corner of the prevailing faith. If after considerable reasoning one is led to believe in any theory or philosophy, it is his faith. His reasoning may be mistaken, wrong, mistaken and sometimes fallacious. But he is liable to criticism because reason is the guiding star of his life. But one's faith is Infallible. It dulls the brain, and makes a man reactionary. A man who claims to be a realist has to challenge the whole of the ancient faith. If he does not stand the onslaught of reason it crumbles down.

It is the first thing for him to shatter the whole down and cleanse a space for the development of a new philosophy. This is the negative side. After it begins the positive work in which sometimes some material of the old faith may be used for the purpose of reconstruction. As far as I am concerned, let me admit at the outset that I have not been able to study much on this point. I had a great desire to study the Oriental Philosophy but I could not get any chance or opportunity to do the same. But so far as the negative study is under discussion, I think I am not unprepared in the extent of questioning the soundness of the old faith. I have been convinced as to non-existence of a conscious supreme being who is guiding and directing the movements of nature. We believe in nature and the whole mystery at the domination of man over nature for his service. There is no conscious power behind it, to direct. This is what our philosophy is.

As for the negative side, we ask a few questions from the believers.

(i) If, as you believe, there is an almighty omnipotent omniscient God—what created the earth or world, let me know why did he create it? This world of woes and misery, a veritable, eternal combination of numberless tragedies! Not a single soul being perfectly satisfied.

Pray, don't say that it is His Law? If he be by his own law, he is not omnipotent. He is another slave like ourselves. Please don't say that it is his enjoyment. Nero burnt one Rome. He killed a very limited number of people. He created very few tragedies, all to his perfect enjoyment. And what is his place in History? By what names do the historians commemorate him? All the vengeful epithets are showered upon him. Fates, are blotted with inveterate diseases condemning Nero—the tyrant—the beast, the wicked. One Chimerah sacrificed a few thousand lives to seek pleasure in it and we hate the very name. Those few were going to justify your almighty, omnipotent Nero, who has been, and is still causing numberless tragedies every day, every hour and every minute? How do you think to support his misdeeds which surpass those of Changes every single moment? I say why did he create this world? A terrible hell, a place of constant and bitter woe? Why did the Almightly create man when he had the power not to do it? Is it the justification for all this? Do you say to award the innocent sufferers hereafter and to punish the wrong-doers as well? Well, well! How far shall you justify a man who may dare to inflict wounds upon your body to apply a very soft and soothing balm upon it afterwards? How far the supporters and organizers of the Gladiator Institution were justified in throwing man before the half-starved furious lions to be killed and well looked after if they could survive and could manage to escape death by the wild beasts? That is in order. Whence comes the consciousness of being created this world and man in it? To seek pleasure? Where is the similarity between him and Nero?

—You Mohammedans and Christians! Hindu Philosophy shall still linger on to offer another argument. I ask you what is your answer to the above question? You don't believe in previous births. Like Hindus you cannot advance the argument of previous misdeeds of the apparently quite innocent sufferers? I ask you why did you commit the omnipotent labour for six days to create the world through word and each day to say—that all was well. Call him to-day. Show him the past history. Make him study the present situation. Let us see if he dares to say, "All is well."

From the 'dungeons of prisons', from the stores of starvation consuming millions upon millions of human beings in slums and huts, from the exploitation labourers, patiently or say apathetically watching the procedure of their blood being sucked by the Capitalist vampires, and the wastage of human energy that will make a man with the least common sense shriek with horror, and from the preference of the surplus production in one cause rather than to divide among the needy producers—to the palaces of kings built upon the foundation laid with human bones...let him see all this and let him say "All is well." Why and wherefore? That is my question. You are silent. Alight then, I proceed.

Well, you Hindus say you all the present sufferers belong to the class of sinners of the previous births. Good. You say the present oppressors were saintly people in their previous births, hence they enjoy power. Let me admit that your ancestors were very saintly people, they tried strong enough to hammer down all the efforts of reason and disbelief. But let us analyze how this argument can really stand.

From the print of view of the most famous jurists punishment can be justified only from three or four ends to meet which it is inflicted upon the wrongdoer. They are retributive, reformatory and deterrent. The retributive theory is now being condemned by all the advanced thinkers. Detergent theory is so following the same fate. Reformative theory is the only one which is indispensable for human progress. It aims at returning the offender as a most competent, and a peace-loving citizen to the society. But what is the nature of punishment inflicted by God upon man even if we suppose them to be offenders? You say they send them to be born as a cow, a cat, a tree, a herb or a beast. You enumerate these punishments to be 84 lakhs. I ask you what is its reformatory effect upon man? How many men have met me who say that they were born as a donkey in a previous birth? None. Don't quote your Puranas. I have no scope to touch your mythology. Moreover do you know that the greatest sin in this world is to be poor. Poverty is a sin. It is a punishment. I ask you how far would you appreciate a criminal who, if a robber who procured and was sentenced to suffer punishments which shall inevitably force man to commit more offences? Had not your God thought of this or he also had to learn these things by experience, but at the cost of untold sufferings to be borne by humanity? What do you think shall be the future of a man who has been born in a poor and miserable family of say a charmer or a sweeper. He is poor, hence he cannot study. He is hated and shunned by his fellow human beings who think themselves to be his superiors.
having been born in say a higher caste. His ignorance, his poverty and the treatment meted out to him shall harden his heart towards society. Suppose he commits a sin, who shall bear the consequences? God, or the learned ones of the society? What about the punishment of those people who were deliberately kept ignorant by the haughty and egotist Brahman and who had to pay the penalty by bearing the stream of being led in their ears for having heard a few sentences of your Sacred Books of learning—the Vedas? If they committed any offence—who was to be responsible for them and who was to bear the brunt? My dear friends! These theories are the inventions of the privileged ones! They justify their usurped power, riches and superiority by the help of these theories. Yes! It was perhaps Upton Sinclair, that wrote at some place, that just make a man a believer in immortality and then rob him of all his riches and possessions. He shall help you even in that ungrudgingly. The coalition amongst the religions preachers and possessors of power brought forth jails, gallows, knouts and these theories.

I ask why your omnipotent God, does not stop every man when he is committing any sin or offence? He can do it quite easily. Why did he not kill the war lords or kill the fury of war in them and thus avoid the catastrophe hurled down on the head of humanity by the Great War? Why does he not produce a certain sentiment in the mind of the British people to liberate India? Why does he not infuse the altruistic enthusiasm in the hearts of all capitalists to forgo their rights of personal possessions of means of production and thus redeem the whole labouring community—nay the whole human society from the bondage of Capitalism. You want to reason out the practicability of socialist theory, I leave it for your almighty to enforce it. People recognize the merits of socialism inasmuch as the general welfare is concerned. They oppose it under the pretext of its being impracticable. Let the Almighty step in and arrange everything in an orderly fashion. Now don’t try to advance round-about arguments, they are out of order. Let me tell you, British role here not because God wills it but because they possesses power and we do not dare to oppose them. Not that it is with the help of God that they are keeping us under their sujebction but it is with the help of guns, and rifles, bomb and bullets, police and militia and our apathy that they are successfully committing the most deplorable sin against society—the outrageous exploitation of one nation by an other. Where is God? What is he doing? Is he enjoying all these woes of human race? A Nero; A change!! Down with him!

Do you ask me how I explain the origin of this world and origin of man? Alright I tell you, Charles Darwin has tried to throw some light on the subject. Study him. Read Soham Swami’s “Commonsense.” It shall answer your question to some extent. This is a phenomenon of nature. The accidental mixture of different substances in the shape of nebula produced this earth. When? Consult history. The same process produced animals and in the long run man. Read Darwin’s ‘Origin of Species’. And all the later progress is due to man’s constant conflict with nature and his efforts to override it. This is the briefest possible explanation of this phenomenon.

Your other argument may be just to ask why a child is born blind or lame if not due to his deeds committed in the previous birth? This problem has been explained away by biologists as a mere biological phenomenon. According to them the whole burden rests upon the shoulders of the parents who may be conscious or ignorant of their own deeds that led to mutilation of the child previous to its birth.

Naturally you may ask another question—though it is quite childish in essence. If no God existed, how did the people come to believe in him? My answer is clear and brief. As they came to believe in ghosts, and evil spirits; the only difference is that belief in God is almost universal and the philosophy well developed. Unlike certain of the radicals I would not attribute its origion to the ingenuity of the exploiters who wanted to keep the people under their sujebction by preaching the existence of a supreme being and then claiming an authority and sanction from him for their privileged positions. Though I do not differ with them on the essential point that all faiths, religions, creeds and such other institutions became in turn the mere supporters of the tyrannical and exploiting institutions, men and classes. Rebellion against king is always a sin according to every religion.

As regards the origin of God my own idea is that having realized the limitations of man, his weaknesses and shortcoming having been taken into consideration, God was brought into imaginary existence to encourage man to face boldly all the trying circumstances, to meet all dangers manfully and to check and restrain his outbursts in prosperity and affluence. God both with his private laws and parental generosity was imagined and painted in greater details. He was to serve as a deterren factors when his fury and private laws were discussed so that man may not become a danger to society. He was to serve a father, mother, sister and brother, friend and helpers when his parental qualifications were to be explained. So that when man be in great distress having been betrayed and deserted by all friends he may find consolation in the idea that an ever true friend was still there to help him, to support him and that He was almighty and could do anything. Really that was useful; yes, the society in the primitive age. The idea of God is helpful to man in distress.

Society has to fight out this belief as well as was fought the idol worship and the narrow conception of religion. Similarly when man tries to stand on his own legs, and become a realist he shall have to throw the faith aside, and to face manfully all the distress, trouble, in which the circumstances may throw him. That is exactly my state of affairs. It is not my vanity, my friends. It is my mode of thinking that has made me an atheist. I don't know whether in my case belief in God and offering of daily prayers which I consider to be most selfish and degrading act on the part of man whether these prayers can prove to be helpful or they shall make my case worse still. I have read of atheists facing all troubles quite boldly, so am I trying to stand like a man with an erect head to the last, even on the gallows.

Let us see how I carry on; one friend asked me to pray. When informed of my atheism, he said, 'During your last days you will begin to believe,' I said, No, dear sir, it shall not be. I will think that to be an act of degradation and demoralization on my part. For selfish motives I am not going to pray. Readers and friends, 'Is this vanity?' If it is, I stand for it.

The Inner Meaning of the Financial Crisis

WILL THE WARNING BE HEEDED?

By WILFRID WELLOCK M. P.

London, Sept. 11.

Parliament has met. The special Session is in being. But so far nothing has been said to change the main conclusions I had reached when I wrote upon the issue a week ago. The salient features of the crisis were these: There was a heavy withdrawal of securities from this country, which was met with payments in gold until the point was reached when more gold could not safely be allowed to leave the country. As the recall of securities continued, the banks, lacking the ready money wherewith to meet this demand, were in difficulties, and made an urgent appeal to the Government to take steps to save the situation. If they failed to do that they represented that the £ would drop in value with disastrous consequences to the whole world. It was then that foreign bankers were consulted and a loan arranged. But it has not yet been denied that one of the conditions of the grant of the loan was that severe economies must be effected in Unemployment Insurance finance, including a cut in the benefits paid to the unemployed. It has also been established that the majority of the Labour Cabinet turned down many of the economic proposals recommended by the May Committee. It has also been revealed that the leaders of the Liberal Party, after learning from the Government on Friay, August 21st, that the Government had turned down one third of the proposals submitted by the Economic Committee, expressed their surprise, and other Liberal leaders, joined hands with the Tories in stating to the Government that their economy proposals were not adequate, and that many more cuts must be made, including a cut in Unemployment Benefit. It was after this interview that the Labour Government fell. Nine tenths of the Labour Government refused to submit to the joint Tory and Liberal demand. That is one of the outstanding facts in the crisis.

This entire situation is so profoundly important in view of all that is taking place in the world today that many of its features call for careful consideration. And the first matter that demands consideration is the policy of the banks. It would appear that the banks claim the right to protect any sort of policy they like, and to refuse all counter control over the money placed at their disposal even though that policy should create a first-class crisis which involves, according to their own account the collapse of the £ and with it of our credit, and when their policy does lead them into trouble, to call upon the Government to help them out, even to the extent of having to make terms with their fellow bankers overseas which actually involve outside interference with the internal affairs of this country.

It is an amazing situation. But it is still more amazing when we are 'told, as Lord Rothermere has declared, that the crisis was largely due to the fact that the banks had been borrowing short and lending long. Such allegations ought to be carefully investigated. The German crisis, which caused much of our money to be locked up, was thus the immediate, but not the real cause of the crisis. Facts as these have shaken the confidence of the public in banking methods, and the entire Labour Movement is going to demand that this whole question be gone into immediately, and that a definite policy be formulated to be put into operation as one of the primary measures of the next Labour Government. With this last named end in view a strong Committee has already been set up.

But a wider and more fundamental issue has been raised by this crisis, that, viz., of why it should be possible, when a nation's financial position is obviously sound, and when the talk of bankruptcy is ludicrous in view of all the facts, it should be possible to throw the whole world into a panic and to create a situation which 'is on all fours, with a condition of bankruptcy, and in which, if the panic were allowed to continue would actually throw thousands of businesses into bankruptcy, and millions of people into penury and despair. If Great Britain is not solvent, no country is solvent. The latest estimate of our national wealth gives a figure of £18,000,000,000. Our investments abroad are ten times larger than the investment of foreigners in the British coffers. Those figures are sufficient to show the absurdity of any idea of this country being in a condition of bankruptcy. It may be contended that this wealth is privately held, while the crisis was national and governmental. Such contention, however, calls for comment.
