By MIK E. TOLSTOY

MOSCOW, Dec. 1.-This is the fifth day of the trial of the American and British Provisional Government war criminals, and the American Provisional Government is the important defendant. The defendant is accused of having committed crimes against humanity, including murder, torture, and other atrocities.

The trial is being held in the Palace of Justice, and is being conducted by the State Prosecutor Krylenko, who is cross-examining the witnesses for the prosecution.

The trial has been characterized by a high level of emotion and passion, with both sides presenting strong evidence to support their respective positions.

The defense argues that the war was fought in self-defense and in defense of the American people, and that the actions of the defendants were necessary to protect the lives of countless innocent people.

The prosecution, on the other hand, asserts that the war was an aggression and that the defendants are responsible for the deaths of millions of people, including innocent civilians.

The trial has continued for several weeks, and it is expected to last for several more. The outcome of the trial is uncertain, but it is certain to have a significant impact on international relations and the course of history.

Discrimination Against the Foreign-Born

By LABOR RESEARCH ASSOCIATION

Discrimination against foreign-born workers is a major problem in the United States, and is a result of the economic and social policies of the government.

The government has consistently supported the interests of the wealthy and powerful, and has been indifferent to the needs and interests of the working class.

This has resulted in discrimination against foreign-born workers, who are often denied the same rights and opportunities as native-born workers.

The government must take steps to end discrimination against foreign-born workers, and to ensure that all workers are treated equally.

The government must also adopt policies that will benefit all workers, and that will create a fair and just society for all.

The Labor Research Association will continue to investigate the issues of the day, and to expose the policies of the government.

We are working for a world without exploitation and poverty, and we will continue to fight for the rights of all workers.
