The working class and the employers have had a long standing conflict between them. This conflict has been going on for centuries and it takes many different forms. The working class is always fighting to improve their living conditions and to secure their rights. The employers, on the other hand, are always trying to keep down wages and increase profits. This conflict is not a new one, it has been going on for generations.

In the past, the working class has had to fight for their rights in a number of ways. They have had to go on strike, march, and protest. They have had to fight for the right to organize and to form unions. They have had to fight for the right to have a voice in the workplace and to have a say in the decisions that are made.

But the working class has not always had an easy time. They have had to fight against the oppression of the bosses and the power of the rich. They have had to fight against the power of the government and the police. They have had to fight against the power of the media and the advertisers.

But the working class has not given up. They have continued to fight for their rights and to improve their living conditions. They have continued to organize and to form unions. They have continued to protest and to march. They have continued to fight against the oppression of the bosses and the power of the rich.

And the working class has not been alone in its fight. It has had the support of the people of the world. It has had the support of the students and the workers in other countries. It has had the support of the people who are fighting for freedom and justice.

But the working class has not been able to achieve all of its goals. It has not been able to bring about the kind of world that it wants. It has not been able to make the world a better place.

But the working class has not given up. It will continue to fight for its rights. It will continue to organize and to form unions. It will continue to protest and to march. It will continue to fight against the oppression of the bosses and the power of the rich.

And the working class will not be alone in its fight. It will have the support of the people of the world. It will have the support of the students and the workers in other countries. It will have the support of the people who are fighting for freedom and justice.

And the working class will make the world a better place.