8,000 CHILDREN SLAVES IN YEAR IN PENNA.

Children Put at Jobs

NEW YORK, May 4—Four thousand children, all working at dangerous jobs, some of them under 10, have been uncovered by the investigation of the Child Labor Commission in Pennsylvania.

The survey, which was made in 1929, shows that there are 17,000 child laborers in Pennsylvania, of whom 8,000 are working in the coal mines, 5,000 in the mills, and 4,000 in the foundries.

The investigation reveals that the majority of the children are working in the coal mines, where they are exposed to the danger of explosions and accidents.

The Pennsylvania Child Labor Commission, which conducted the survey, urges the enactment of laws to protect children from the harmful effects of working in mines and factories.

Detroit District Leads

In the Detroit district, which includes the states of Michigan, Indiana, and Ohio, 8,000 children are working in the factories, of whom 3,000 are under 10 years old.

The investigation shows that the majority of these children are working in the textile mills, where they are exposed to the danger of accidents and disease.

The Detroit district commission, which conducted the survey, urges the enactment of laws to protect children from the harmful effects of working in factories.

Detroit district commission chairmen, who conducted the survey, say that the majority of the children are working in the textile mills, where they are exposed to the danger of accidents and disease.
