London, Sept. 7.—Officials of the British Union of Conciliation and Arbitration have decided to refuse to continue efforts to secure settlement of the coal strikes. The decision of the British Union was announced yesterday by Joko Giger, the general secretary of the union.

The collapse of a C. I. O. union which was formed in the coal field by a group of the C. I. O. officials, has resulted in the withdrawal of the union from the coal field. The union, which had been organized in the coal field in the spring, has now ceased to exist.

The collapse of the union was due to the fact that the C. I. O. officials, who had been organizing the union, decided to withdraw from the coal field. The officials had been organizing the union for the past year.

The officials had been organizing the union for the past year in order to secure a larger share of the coal field for the union. Primary responsibility for the success of the Daily Worker drive was given to the Editor-in-Chief of the Workers’ International, who was assisted by the director of the drive, E. B. Smith, and the editor of the paper, E. H. Foster. The drive was launched with an immediate appeal to the workers to join the Daily Worker, and an appeal to the Daily Worker members to help spread the word.

Foster said that no issues existed between the republican and democratic parties.

The day before the strike, the Daily Worker conducted an interview with a Pennsylvania Railroad policeman who had been called to the camp to help maintain order. Foster said that the Daily Worker had never been a political party, and that it was now the duty of all workers to join the Daily Worker and help spread the word.
