In Memory of the Heroic Toilers of the Paris Commune

Liberation of France from German Invasion and Socialism of Workers From Capitalism Undertaken by Proletariat Which Rose Against Old Regime

By V. I. Lenin

Staff editor of the International newspapers in Germany.

Among the many lessons of the history of 1870, France came under the yoke of the German invasion and was reduced to captivity for eleven years, but the nation humiliated and crushed in spirit. The presidency of the day, making a pretense of peace, was replaced by the German command, and France was dragged into the General Staff and its war machine. It was a tragic moment; the nation was forced to submit itself to the will of the conqueror.

The story of the heroic toilers of the Paris Commune is one of the most striking examples of how the working class, the proletariat, rose to defend the nation against its enemies. The Commune was the first time the working class asserted its right to self-defense, the first time it took up arms to defend the nation.

The story of the Commune is a model of how the working class, the proletariat, can accomplish this task. It is the story of how the working class, the proletariat, can win the right to self-defense.

As a matter of fact, the working class of Paris rose up against the German oppressor, against the oppression of the working class, against the oppression of the working class, and the Commune was the first time the working class asserted its right to self-defense.

The Commune was not only a struggle against the German oppressor, but a struggle for the liberation of the working class, for the liberation of the working class, and the Commune was the first time the working class asserted its right to self-defense.
