Labor Prepares For Feb. 17 Hearing By Butler Forces

WASHINGTON, Feb. 2—Legislative leaders of some unions are geeing up a battle against oppression legislation that looks even more ominous than the Taft-Hartley act. They see the public hearings, which open tomorrow, as the first step in this drive. Secretary Burrows, the head of the Committee on Labor-Management Relations, has been called to Congress to testify on the Taft-Hartley bill. The committee has given notice that it will not hold any other hearings on the bill until the labor-management committee has concluded its hearings.

The Taft-Hartley bill, if enacted, would expand the powers of the union leaders and eliminate the rights of the workers. It would also make it more difficult for workers to organize and to strike. The bill would provide for the appointment of a National Labor Board to hear and decide cases of labor disputes. The board would have the power to issue injunctions to prevent strikes, and to require union leaders to submit to arbitration their differences with their employers.

The bill would also provide for the imposition of fines and penalties on union leaders who violate the law. It would also provide for the appointment of a National Labor Board to hear and decide cases of labor disputes. The board would have the power to issue injunctions to prevent strikes, and to require union leaders to submit to arbitration their differences with their employers.

The bill would also provide for the imposition of fines and penalties on union leaders who violate the law. It would also provide for the appointment of a National Labor Board to hear and decide cases of labor disputes. The board would have the power to issue injunctions to prevent strikes, and to require union leaders to submit to arbitration their differences with their employers.

The bill would also provide for the imposition of fines and penalties on union leaders who violate the law. It would also provide for the appointment of a National Labor Board to hear and decide cases of labor disputes. The board would have the power to issue injunctions to prevent strikes, and to require union leaders to submit to arbitration their differences with their employers.

The bill would also provide for the imposition of fines and penalties on union leaders who violate the law. It would also provide for the appointment of a National Labor Board to hear and decide cases of labor disputes. The board would have the power to issue injunctions to prevent strikes, and to require union leaders to submit to arbitration their differences with their employers.

The bill would also provide for the imposition of fines and penalties on union leaders who violate the law. It would also provide for the appointment of a National Labor Board to hear and decide cases of labor disputes. The board would have the power to issue injunctions to prevent strikes, and to require union leaders to submit to arbitration their differences with their employers.

The bill would also provide for the imposition of fines and penalties on union leaders who violate the law. It would also provide for the appointment of a National Labor Board to hear and decide cases of labor disputes. The board would have the power to issue injunctions to prevent strikes, and to require union leaders to submit to arbitration their differences with their employers.

The bill would also provide for the imposition of fines and penalties on union leaders who violate the law. It would also provide for the appointment of a National Labor Board to hear and decide cases of labor disputes. The board would have the power to issue injunctions to prevent strikes, and to require union leaders to submit to arbitration their differences with their employers.

The bill would also provide for the imposition of fines and penalties on union leaders who violate the law. It would also provide for the appointment of a National Labor Board to hear and decide cases of labor disputes. The board would have the power to issue injunctions to prevent strikes, and to require union leaders to submit to arbitration their differences with their employers.

The bill would also provide for the imposition of fines and penalties on union leaders who violate the law. It would also provide for the appointment of a National Labor Board to hear and decide cases of labor disputes. The board would have the power to issue injunctions to prevent strikes, and to require union leaders to submit to arbitration their differences with their employers.

The bill would also provide for the imposition of fines and penalties on union leaders who violate the law. It would also provide for the appointment of a National Labor Board to hear and decide cases of labor disputes. The board would have the power to issue injunctions to prevent strikes, and to require union leaders to submit to arbitration their differences with their employers.

The bill would also provide for the imposition of fines and penalties on union leaders who violate the law. It would also provide for the appointment of a National Labor Board to hear and decide cases of labor disputes. The board would have the power to issue injunctions to prevent strikes, and to require union leaders to submit to arbitration their differences with their employers.