The Hainan War-Provocation

BY WILLIAM E. POSTER

If you think that the Hainan Island area is not a significant issue, you are mistaken. This area is a key to understanding the current situation in the South China Sea.

The Chinese claim to Hainan Island is based on historical and international law. China has been administering the island since 1933. The United States has no legal grounds for its claim.

We have seen China's response to the US war provocations. This is a clear indication of China's resolve to defend its territory. We should support China's right to self-defense.

Relief Needs Rise in Chicago

CHICAGO — A battle for relief funds is expected to unfold this week as the campaign to bring aid to victims of the tornado begins to take shape this week as more and more relief agencies began to call for funding.

The U.S. Bureau of Employment Security declared that it was going to be difficult to meet demands for unemployment compensation. The Chicago Daily Worker reported that the unemployment is running out of control and that more people are calling in for help.

The government stated that it would continue to provide aid to those affected by the tornado, but that it would be limited due to the current economic crisis.

The situation is expected to remain critical in the coming weeks.
