FRANCE AND THE UN

By William Z. Foster

THE WALKOUT of the French delegation from the United Nations on Sept. 29, when the Central Committee of the French Socialist Party voted to put the question of Algeria on the agenda, was a culmination of the movement of the French working people to bring an end to the war

By April 1956 the Paris workers had been on strike for 130 days. The workers had taken the offensive, seized control of the economy and called the politicians and generals to account. The workers' movement had spread to the rest of Europe and from there to Asia and Africa.

In all U.S. history the Department of State has never seen the construction of a popular front in which the working people had so thoroughly laid bare the so-called "democratic" institutions of the republic.

The conflict between the French government and the worker-volunteers who control the machinery of production and distribution and are called upon to defend the interests of a capitalist class and a ruling military caste is one of the most profound and important conflicts in the world today.

The French workers will not give up the struggle until Algeria is freed from the colonial yoke. They will not be satisfied until Algeria is free and independent. They are determined to do everything in their power to aid the Algerian workers and farmers.

The French government has been forced to make concessions to the workers' movement. It has been forced to recognize the right of workers to strike, to negotiate with workers' organizations, and to recognize the right of workers to have a say in the management of industry.

The French workers have also been forced to take action to protect the interests of the workers in other countries. They have supported the workers in Portugal, in Greece, and in the United States. They have also supported the workers in the British Commonwealth countries, and in the United States.
