Britain Warns Chiang Not to Moleste Oilingship

LONDON, June 29—The British government today warned the Chinese Nationalist leaders that the British oilingship, the "Ardennes," would have to be recalled if China continued to threaten the shipment of oil to Britain. The warning was made by the British government in a letter to the Chinese government expressing concern over the Chinese government's actions.

The letter stated that the British government had received reports of Chinese activities in the area surrounding the oilingship, which was scheduled to arrive in Hong Kong on June 30. The British government expressed concern that these activities could delay the arrival of the oilingship and affect the delivery of fuel to British interests in the region.

The letter went on to say that the British government would take necessary action to ensure the safety and security of the oilingship and its crew. It also stated that the British government would continue to monitor the situation and keep in close contact with the Chinese government to ensure the smooth delivery of the oilingship.

TEN YEARS OF THE UN

By WILFRED P. FOSTER

When the United Nations was established in 1945, it was expected to bring about a new era of peace and prosperity in the world. The United States, with its vast economic and military power, was one of the main supporters of the new organization. The United Nations was seen as a symbol of world unity and a way to prevent future wars.

The first ten years of the United Nations were marked by a period of optimism and progress. The United Nations was able to prevent the outbreak of several major conflicts, including the Korean War and the Suez Crisis. The United Nations was also able to make progress on many other issues, including human rights and economic development.

However, the United Nations faced many challenges during its first ten years. The organization was criticized for its lack of effectiveness in addressing some of the world's most pressing issues, including poverty and famine.

In the years since, the United Nations has continued to evolve and adapt to meet the challenges of the modern world. The organization is now seen as a critical outpost for global leadership and multilateral action.

The United Nations is one of the most important organizations of our time. It is a symbol of hope and the promise that we can work together to build a better world for all.
