Scottsboro Defender Stresses Need for Widespread "Daily"

THE fight to save the Scottsboro boys, Angelo Herndon and all class-war prisoners can be greatly intensified through the spread of the Daily Worker. Twenty thousand new readers by September 1 means 20,000 additional fighters ranks-means a broader front for organizing a powerful defense movement.

A mass circulation for the "Daily" adds pressure to our legal struggles in the courts. This would also in-sure its sale and distribution in many cities and states where it is now greatly hampered by the police and courts.

The actual release on bail of Angelo Herndon climaxed a day of feverish activity by Brodsky, who flew from New York Friday night with the precious $15,000 raised by the I. L. D. This activity included a four-hour drive into the country to secure the signature of Judge e Lee B. Wyatt to the release order.

Prior to this the signature of the court clerk, the attorney of record, and of Herndon himself had been obtained, following the posting of the cash. "When I went to get Herndon's signature, I was given the most amazing demonstration of the spirit of this young fighter." Brodsky said. "Before I could get his signature to the papers for his own release, I had to answer a flood of questions which he poured out to me about the latest developments! of the struggle against starvation. terror, and fascism in this country and internationally."
