Russia Day by Day.

May Day in Moscow.

May Day in Moscow was greater they ever. Never have so many observed the workmen parades, and bands it was realized that the time had come to give May Day some of the jubility and mirth of the old May Day. The whole of the great factory workers, the party workers, the workers' clubs, and the organizations of all kinds, had put their best efforts into the preparations for the great event. The parades, the demonstrations, the speeches, the music, the dancing, the singing, all contributed to create a festive atmosphere.

The military parade was a grand spectacle. The Red Army, with its无数的 divisions, marched proudly through the streets of Moscow, accompanied by bands playing patriotic songs. The workers were also represented, with their own banners and flags, and the whole scene was a celebration of the workers' struggle for freedom.

The workers' procession was a signal of solidarity and unity. The workers of all trades and industries walked together, waving their banners and chanting songs of revolution. The air was filled with the sound of their voices, and the sound of the drums and the pipes of the bands.

Meanwhile, in the Kremlin, the politicians and bureaucrats were preparing for the day's celebrations. They were busy making sure that everything was in place for the grand parade to begin.

How Larkin Won a Strike.

Jim Larkin was back home again, released from prison after a desperate struggle. He was given a hero's welcome. The strike had been a great success, and Larkin had played a key role in its victory.

Larkin was a brave and determined fighter. He had stood up to the employers and the police, and had won the support of the workers. He had been a shining example of how one man can make a difference.

But the strike was far from over. The employers were still trying to undermine the workers' gains. Larkin knew that he had to stand up to them again, and he did.

Larkin's speech to the workers was a rallying cry. He said:

"My boys, you have won a victory. But the struggle is not over yet. We must continue to fight for our rights. We must not give in to the employers. We must stand together and win.

End of Report.