Garment Industry Strike Issues
JOINING in the great textile strike movement and adding force to its already impressive size is a new industry that not long ago was thought to be immune to such action. The women's shirtwaist workers, who make the clothes the women in this country wear, have decided to go on strike and demand that they be organized into a union. This is the first time in the history of the United States that a strike has been called by the women's garment workers, and it is a significant fact that this strike has been called in New York City, where the garment industry is centered.

The strike was called by the Women's Trade Union League, an organization of female workers who have been working for years to organize the garment industry. The League has been involved in several battles with the industry, and this time they have decided to take a stand and demand that the workers be paid a living wage and work in safe conditions.

The industry, however, is not taking the strike lightly. They are confident that they can break the strike and keep the workers working. They have already begun to replace the striking workers with strikebreakers, who are brought in from other parts of the country.

The strike is likely to be long and hard, and it is likely to have far-reaching effects on the garment industry. It is a significant fact that this strike has been called in New York City, where the garment industry is centered. The outcome of this strike will have important implications for the entire industry.

Lehman 'Promises' Social Insurance
FEARING at the convention of the State Federation of Labor in Buffalo yesterday, Jacob A. Lehman, president of the Women's Trade Union League, made a speech in which he promised to appeal to the United States government to establish a system of national insurance for all workers.

Lehman said: "The workers of the United States have been deprived of their rights for too long. They are denied the right to organize, the right to strike, and the right to a living wage. The government must step in and protect the workers."

The speech was well received by the delegates, who are eager to see some action on this important issue.

Nazi's Issue New Orders Against Jews
3,000,000 Copies of Anti-Semitic Regulations Distributed
BRUSSELS, Aug. 31—A new round of anti-Semitic regulations was begun here today following the issue of new orders against the Jews. The orders include restrictions on the use of the Jewish name, the wearing of Jewish clothing, and the establishment of a special Jewish school system.

The orders were issued by the Nazi authorities, who are determined to eliminate all trace of the Jewish element from the Belgian population.

Many Socialist Groups Write to Spain Favoring United Front
Spain's Socialist leaders have written to the Spanish government expressing their support for the United Front. The letter was signed by a group of leading Socialists, including Jose Luis Rodriguez, who is the leader of the united Socialist Movement.

The Socialist leaders write: "We fully support the United Front, which we believe is the only way to achieve a real solution to the Spanish crisis. We believe that the United Front is the only way to achieve a real solution to the Spanish crisis."
