The most significant thing about the Report of the Commission of Inquiry into the 1976 events in Soweto to Kenya is not so much what it reveals in its findings as it is the fact that it is the first official admission since the emergency that the African people of Kenya have justifiable grievances.

Until now this has been gritted teeth by the Kenya Colonial Secretary of State for Colonies, who have always created the impression that the Africans who support Mau Mau are those who, for some mysterious reason, are not really "Africans" at all—sent to a state ofavery. This childish superficial explanation has now gone to the point where they have given rise to Mau Mau events and the people are otherwise well informed and very revealing report.

Contrary to the highly cynical attitude evinced by Colonial Secretary Olive Letton, the author of the Report—three dead by police, Mr. Willson, M.W. C. Awer, and E. B. Wakefield, who in the South African Socialists, Moses Arthur Bok, and Samuel Josephs, who have all been made to undergo the same vitriolization which they found during the Mau Mau era, in Kenya to frankly admit that not only the African policies and the methods used by Mau Mau adherent

PADMORE—The report of the Consultative and research groups is a very disturbing report. His book on the Gold Coast Mau Mau is a contribution to the study of the Kenyan Government's policies,

The findings of the Court of Enquiry into the Engineers’ wage claim is a report that has serious implications for the well-being of the nation. This report, which was released by the Department of Labour, has raised a number of important questions about the wage structure and the role of trade unions in the country. The report suggested that the current wage structure is not adequate to meet the needs of the workers, and that there is a need for a comprehensive review of the wage structure.

The report also highlighted the need for trade unions to play a more active role in ensuring that workers’ rights are protected and that they are paid fairly. It called for a more proactive approach by the unions to ensure that workers are better represented and that their interests are protected.

The report also highlighted the need for the government to take a more active role in ensuring that workers’ rights are protected and that they are paid fairly. It called for a more proactive approach by the government to ensure that workers are better represented and that their interests are protected.

The report called for a comprehensive review of the wage structure, and for the introduction of a new wage structure that would be fair and equitable. It also called for the establishment of a new wage board that would be independent of the government and that would be able to determine the appropriate wage levels.

However, the report was met with resistance from both the government and the unions, who were concerned about the cost implications of the proposed changes. The government argued that the proposed changes would lead to an increase in the cost of living, while the unions argued that the proposed changes would not go far enough in addressing the needs of the workers.

Despite the resistance, the government and the unions eventually agreed to the introduction of the new wage structure. The new wage board was established, and it began to determine the appropriate wage levels.

The new wage board has been successful in determining fair and equitable wage levels for workers. It has also been successful in ensuring that workers’ rights are protected.

The introduction of the new wage structure has had a positive impact on the lives of workers in Kenya. It has led to an increase in their wages, and it has also led to an increase in their purchasing power.

The success of the new wage structure has encouraged other countries to follow Kenya’s lead in introducing comprehensive wage reviews. It has also encouraged other countries to follow Kenya’s lead in establishing independent wage boards.

However, there is still much work to be done. The government and the unions must continue to work together to ensure that workers’ rights are protected and that they are paid fairly. This will require continued efforts to ensure that workers’ rights are protected and that they are paid fairly.
