KANSAS CITY--The Missouri Black Political Assembly met on Jan. 24 at the Grant Avenue Hotel in Kansas City. The theme of the conference was "Which Way in '76?" The alternatives, as put forth by Brother Richard Beckett, the Missouri State Chairperson, were "The National Black Assembly or a Progressive United Front." To understand the theme, it is necessary to understand the history of the National Black Political Assembly. The NBPA first met out in 1971, and came primarily from the Black Caucus, a caucus made up of all the national black elected officials as well as most black national organizations.

It was no accident that the call was for a convention to be held in March, 1972, an election year. It was clear that the assembly was to harness the black vote to be used as a wedge for black spokespersons to force concessions, or at least promises, from those seeking political office on national and local levels.

From the beginning there was a source of conflict, because the assembly was to be non-partisan toward the Republican and Democratic parties. As stated in the National Black Political Agenda, it was to be "an independent black political force which acted as a brokerage for black people in their dealings with both political parties and national political figures."
The problem was that most of the Black elected officials were already committed to one party and saw the assembly as a way to collect the Black vote for that party. This was clearly an opposition to the line of the assembly.

In his opening address to the assembly, Mayor Richard Hatcher of Gary, Indiana, at the time one of the tri-chairpersons, state very clearly that:

"The American system does not work for the masses of our people, and it cannot be made to work without radical fundamental change." In his speech, both Parties have Betrayed us he said:

"The profound crisis of Black people and the disaster of America are not simply caused by men nor will they be resolved by men alone. These crises are the crises of basically planned economics and politics, and of cultural degradation. None of the Democratic candidates and none of the Republican candidates, regardless of their vague promises to us or to their white constituencies—can solve our problems or the problems of this country without radically changing the system by which it operates."

Despite this kind of rhetoric, the assembly was sold to the Democratic Party, and it was the very ones who had called for an independent all Black political organ.

Another source of conflict at the 1972 convention was the call for dismantling the illegal State of Israel. The Organization of African Unity, which condemned the Israeli forces for their expansionist policies and forceful occupation of the sovereign territory of another State, was adopted by the Convention. This position, in a watered down form, was heeded contested by elected officials, and by some others whose livelihood depended on Jewish support.

After adoption of this position, the national elected officials left the NBPA in mass, leaving only one representative, Charles Diggs, also tri-chairperson, to represent their cause.

THE LITTLE ROCK CONVENTION in '74
After the sellout in '72, the remaining elected officials also pulled out, for the assembly no longer served its purpose. Consequently, in 1974 at the assembly's second convention in Little Rock, Arkansas, only a skeleton of those represented at the first convention attended.

Most notable in Little Rock was the address of Brother Imamu Baraka to the convention in which he called for Black workers to take the lead in the struggles of Black people, and called for Marxism-Leninism to guide that struggle. Imamu had in the past been a critic of any Black position supporting Marxism-Leninism, calling it a white boy philosophy. No one, including members of his own organization, the Congress of African People, was prepared for this progressive move.

WHY WE NEED A PROGRESSIVE UNITED FRONT
The assembly is due to meet again in March, 1976. It is another election year, and brokerage politics, clearly in the interest of the elected officials, is again becoming an issue. Obviously, it cannot be in the interest of Black working people, for the fundamental change that Mayor Hatcher spoke of in '72 has not occurred. In fact, we are still faced with the question of how to bring about the changes. Which way in '76: The National Black Political Assembly or a Progressive United Front?

There was considerable discussion of the two alternatives at the Missouri Assembly. Some people, especially Furnish, who was real cold and could not see a difference between the two: they could not see why it was necessary to change the structure in order to make the changes that most agreed needed to be made. This confusion existed throughout the conference. The right to vote. The delegates abstaining from making a decision. The State Assembly was charged with the task of electing delegates who could answer this question, so the K.C. members chose to participate only as observers. The St. Louis delegates unanimously supported the Progressive United Front, so this will be the position of the Missouri State Assembly at the national convention.

The reasons for supporting a Progressive United Front are that we need a totally different philosophy to guide our struggles than the guiding philosophy of the current leadership of the NBPA. Their philosophy still is, brokerage power politics within the capitalist system, whether that means bartering between the two political parties, or tailing behind as an appendage of one party or the other. This is the guiding philosophy of the organization we are to build. Anti-Imperialism is a principle, it will never be in the interest of the working class as a whole, or the black masses, who are primarily workers.

An organization which speaks to the interests and issues of the working class, in turn, demands working class participation and leadership. The NBPA by its very nature cannot accomplish this. Only a Progressive United Front has these possibilities and is the answer to the question "Which Way in '76?"
