School: Training fighters for the U.S. revolution

But the moment when workers at Chrysler are getting laid off, it won't do to tell them. "Your main enemy is both imperialist superpowers." The U.S. imperialists are the immediate enemy of the people of this country and U.S. Marxists-Leninists have to be in the front ranks of the struggle against them.

While directing most of our efforts at our own ruling class, we also have to do education about the nature of the Soviet social-imperialists. In the long run, U.S. workers are very much threatened by Moscow's rulers and their warmongering. We must find appropriate ways to point this out and rally workers here to oppose Soviet aggression, such as that in Kampuchea today.

The question of how U.S. communists apply the three worlds theory was posed as a test for each brigade to write up—a new method used to evaluate better how much we were learning or confused about the end of school for individual students. This final essay, which was the last essay of the entire article, was designed to be useful to all the US. students and some students.

Unlike the kind of school assignments that are given in the U.S., questions aren't sprung on us, but we were encouraged to discuss the question.

But the questions were meaningful to us. We had understood from these five assignments that we were being treated as the class enemy.

Support the CPML in its third year of struggle

This month marks the second anniversary of the Communist Party Marxist-Leninist (CPML). While the party isn't holding large-scale celebrations this year, due to many other pressing tasks, this happy occasion is a time for all of us to work even harder to support the revolutionary cause.

The CPML has made significant gains in its first two years of existence. It has successfully developed as a Marxist-Leninist organization, training cadres throughout the country and planting itself firmly on the ground. The CPML has also begun to play an important role in linking itself with the mass movements of the working class and the oppressed peoples. The CPML has contributed to the various united front movements and to the struggle for furthering Marxist-Leninist unity and bringing the leading revolutionaries into one organization.

There are still many tasks left unfinished and many new ones ahead. The next period must be one of transforming our young Party along with the growing new revolutionary movement into a mass party of the working class which can play a dynamic role in the days to come.

We call on our readers to increase their support for the CPML and its work. One of the most important ways this support can be shown is through a new fundraising campaign. Thousands of dollars are needed to support the Party's organizers working under difficult conditions from the Mississippi Delta to the lettuce fields of California.

No, there will be no big celebrations this year. But those of us who support the Party's work can do something to express our feelings. Checks can be sent through The Call, Box 5957, Chicago, Ill. 60680.
