Deng Xiaoping's
Modern Industrial
Boondoggles

The grandfathers of Deng Xiaoping, Huai Hsueh and Co. for developing China into a "modern and advanced" country under the leadership of the CCP's capitalist-bureaucracy. The system of Western imperialism, Deng et al are following, is a system that is not only patently anachronistic, but is also utterly incompatible with China's在一个"modern and advanced" condition.

Under this system, which China's capitalist-bureaucrat and Chinese Revolutionaries have begun to adopt, the territory of "China" has been reduced to a mere factory for capitalist exploitation. The Chinese revolutionaries are now directing the development of China's economy in accordance with the dictates of foreign imperialism.

For the revisionists, China is a "green rice paddy"—a machine to produce commodities for export. They are seeking to transform China into a great industrial power by adopting the "joint-venture" system of imperialism, which is a capitalist system of exploitation.

The concept of "joint-venture" was first developed in 1976 by Deng Xiaoping and his "four old men." The idea was to attract foreign capital to China to help develop its economy. The "joint-ventures" were to be a way to share the profits of China's natural resources and labor with foreign companies.

The "joint-ventures" were supposed to be a way for China to benefit from foreign technology and expertise. However, the revisionists have turned the "joint-ventures" into a way for foreign companies to exploit China's labor and resources.

The Chinese government has signed many "joint-venture" agreements with foreign companies. These agreements have given foreign companies control over many of China's key industries. The Chinese government has also given foreign companies preferential treatment in the form of tax breaks and other incentives.

The revisionists claim that these agreements are a way to "upgrade" China's economy. However, the "joint-ventures" have not resulted in a transformation of China's economy. Instead, they have led to a further exploitation of China's natural resources and labor.

The "joint-ventures" have also led to a loss of sovereignty for China. The Chinese government has given up control over many of its key industries to foreign companies. The Chinese government is no longer able to make decisions about its own economy.

The revisionists claim that China is now a "new socialist country." However, the "joint-ventures" have led to a further loss of sovereignty for China. The Chinese government is no longer able to make decisions about its own economy. China is still a capitalist country, and the "joint-ventures" are a way for foreign companies to exploit China's labor and resources.

The "joint-ventures" are a way for foreign companies to exploit China's labor and resources. The Chinese government has given up control over many of its key industries to foreign companies. The Chinese government is no longer able to make decisions about its own economy. China is still a capitalist country, and the "joint-ventures" are a way for foreign companies to exploit China's labor and resources.

The revisionists claim that China is now a "new socialist country." However, the "joint-ventures" have led to a further loss of sovereignty for China. The Chinese government is no longer able to make decisions about its own economy. China is still a capitalist country, and the "joint-ventures" are a way for foreign companies to exploit China's labor and resources.

The revisionists claim that China is now a "new socialist country." However, the "joint-ventures" have led to a further loss of sovereignty for China. The Chinese government is no longer able to make decisions about its own economy. China is still a capitalist country, and the "joint-ventures" are a way for foreign companies to exploit China's labor and resources.