The New Browderite Strategy of the MLOC/CPUSA (M)-L

In the past two years or so, the MLOC/CPUSA (M)-L has seen both the acquisition of considerable economic and political power, as well as the enormous growth of its membership. This growth has been accompanied by a major organizational change—the merger of the MLOC with CPUSA (M)-L. This merger has resulted in a new party, the MLOC/CPUSA (M)-L, which is now the most powerful communist group in the United States.

The merger has been significant in several ways. First, it has given the MLOC/CPUSA (M)-L a much larger membership base, which is likely to allow it to expand its influence in the labor movement and in other social movements. Second, the merger has brought together two parties that have a long history of political struggle and have both played important roles in the international communist movement.

The MLOC/CPUSA (M)-L has been especially active in the labor movement, where it has made significant gains in recent years. It has played a major role in organizing workers in the auto industry and in other sectors, and it has been active in the fight for higher wages and better working conditions.

The MLOC/CPUSA (M)-L has also been active in the political arena. It has supported a number of progressive candidates, including Bernie Sanders, and it has been involved in a number of electoral campaigns.

In summary, the MLOC/CPUSA (M)-L is a major force in the United States, and it is likely to continue to play a significant role in the political and social movements of the future.

Against Social-Democratic Infiltration of the Marxist-Leninist Movement—Part 4

The Browderite line is a deviation that has been present in the communist movement for many years. It is characterized by a focus on economic issues and a rejection of political struggle. This line is a deviation that needs to be overcome if the communist movement is to continue to grow and expand.
