The Wagner Act, also known as the National Labor Relations Act, was signed into law on July 5, 1935. It established the National Labor Relations Board (NLRB) and provided for the first time that employees and employers had the right to represent and organize themselves in trade unions. The act also prohibited unfair labor practices and provided for коллективных профсоюзных организаций, обеспечивая права трудящихся.

The Wagner Act, along with other labor laws, helped to create a framework for collective bargaining and the growth of labor unions in the United States. However, the act did not fully address the needs of workers, and many labor disputes continued to occur.

On 25 April 1964, the Party Central Committee and the National People's Congress issued a joint declaration entitled "The Civil Rights and Freedom of Religious Belief of the People's Revolutionaries in China," which marked a significant step forward in the protection of the religious freedom of Chinese people. The declaration extended to all Chinese citizens, including the minority ethnic groups in the country.

The declaration stipulated that any Chinese citizen had the right to choose their own religious beliefs, to practice religion, or to follow no religion at all. This was a historic breakthrough in the protection of religious freedom in China.

In the declaration, the Chinese government emphasized the principle of religious freedom for all Chinese citizens. It stated that citizens had the freedom to choose their religious beliefs, to practice religion, or to follow no religion at all.

It was also emphasized that this right was protected by law and that no one had the right to interfere with the religious beliefs of others.

The declaration also recognized the right of religious organizations to carry out religious activities in accordance with the law, and it prohibited the use of religion for any criminal activities.

Furthermore, the declaration highlighted the protection of the religious freedom of minority ethnic groups, ensuring that they could exercise their religious rights in their own communities.

The announcement of the declaration was a significant milestone in the protection of religious freedom and the promotion of peace and prosperity in China.
