Chinese Revisionists Rob Mao's Greatest Foe
Rotting Corpse From Capitalist Boneyard

The Chinese revisionists dropped a bombshell all right when they revealed the secretary of the 11th Party Central Committee, Chen Tu-hsiu, had connived during the recent 5th Plenary session of the Party Central Committee to reinforce the “number 2 capitalist bloc.” Mao and Liu were mortal enemies, but from some sort of personal rivalry as the bourgeoisie press maintains, the struggle between them continued on through life and death, the class struggle between the working class and the bourgeoisie, the socialist road and the capitalist road. Their differences over every major question in society were a source of great concern to Mao.

Because it is one step more in the process of capitalist restoration that has been going on in China since the 60’s, Liu’s rehabilitation was in fact very predictable. Already a half year ago, the freshly-installed revisionists were still publicly calling Liu a “revivalist,” and even at that time Mao had predicted his restoration. Now, as Mao put it, “the rise to power of revisionists means the rise to power of the bourgeoisie.”

Liu: “Criticism of inferior by superiors is alright but the other way around things become chaotic.”

of revolutionism means the rise to power of the bourgeoisie.”—and this definitely needs to be corrected. The ideological and political line of the revisionist rulers.

Carrying Out Liu’s Line
Without Liu

Since the 1969 coup, Teng and company have been in open defiance of the basic principles of the Revolution—left by Mao and the Party Congress as well as the country’s masses of Chinese people fought.

Together with this, it was Liu’s support of the “merit” of capitalism in China. It was an open attack on Mao who stressed that “the question of whether socialism or capitalism will win out in a country is a radical one, and it cannot be settled. It is a question of the soul of the country.”

Mao said, “Liu Shao-chi advocated the thesis of the living out of class struggle, but he himself never ceased to

The revolutionary struggle in El Salvador continues to turn up the heat on the U.S. puppet junta. In what was described as "the most audacious military action yet" by Salvadoran rebels, the Ciudad Delgado District of San Salvador was occupied and held for several hours last month by the APRP, the urban guerrilla organization which occupied the embassy on February 25, is freedom for all political prisoners in Colombia.

The embassy takeover occurred as kangaroo court trials were beginning for more than 500 workers, peasant and student activists, accused of being "terrorists." The trials mark an important stage in the Colombian government's crackdown on the popular movement. There are an estimated 5,000 political prisoners in Colombian jails, over 3,000 of whom are in jail simply to get the first 300 convicted with stiff sentences, to pave the way for railroading the rest, thereby democrolizing the people's movement.

 Hosting the delegation from Bogota were Dilma Moreira, who was imprisoned on charges of being a terrorist on several counts, and who also has been held for seditious plots. In a previous trip to this country, she was held in jail in Chicago. She was able to get the first 300 convicted with stiff sentences, to pave the way for railroading the rest, thereby democrolizing the people's movement.
