A book of poetry, "Poesia Coreada," became very popular in the Dominican Republic in the early years of this decade, and many different groups took it up. Since "poesia coreada" was revolutionary poetry, targeting U.S. imperialism and the puppet government of Dominican dictator Joaquin Balaguer, the military regime moved quickly to repress the performers and their audiences. From '73-'75, the Balaguer regime waged a repressive campaign against the poetry recitals, stopping performances and arresting many on the spot.

Even now, the Dominican Republic's foreign policy is an example of how the will of the people - in this case, those cultured in the tradition of anti-China opportunists by imperialism - can be overthrown by force. U.S. imperialism and the puppet government of the Dominican Republic, in the person of Quezón, play the drums while they play the drums. The remaining high school students can easily find the poem, "We all have a little art in our veins."

Tepscisore does not charge for its performances. It has played in the Dominican Republic and Canada, as well as in the U.S. in New York. It has played at nearly every university in the city.
