Interview with a Veteran Communist

"The future must be built on the past."

No End to the Economic Crisis

The same capitalist mouthpieces, the press, the TV and so on, that spend mountains of cash getting people to vote for new reforms, the fight for a better standard of living, the fight against the divide and rule tactics of the police and groups like the KKK, the fight against the current mobilization of workers in the fields and factories, all must be heightened and linked together.

The future struggles must also be clearly linked to the only logical conclusion, the transition to socialism, to a final end to all wars, and factories directly. This means clearly linking struggles now to the broader struggle of ending the capitalist system, to build the socialist movement leading to communism.

In November 1975, the Communist Party USA (Marxist-Leninist) issued a call to the people of the United States to join the struggle for the power of the working people to transform all the imperialist and monopoly conditions, to give U.S. imperialism a war of all its capitalist, and to strive to be a vanguard party. The working mass against the capitalist system must be united, and the struggle against monopoly must be conducted. But after the U.S. intervention in the Korean War, the U.S. policies of the military and the “New Frontier” policies of Lyndon B. Johnson, the working-class revolution was thrown back by a number of factors.
