80,000 demand Puerto Rican independence

By C.M. TAVAREZ
SAN JUAN, P.R. - The largest and most sustained demonstration of the history of Puerto Rico's independence movement took place here Sunday, Sept. 12, with an estimated attendance of about 80,000 people or one-tenth of the island's population. It was the largest mass movement ever participated in by Puerto Ricans in Puerto Rico. The demonstration, organized by the Movimiento Pro Independencia [MILITANT - Movement for Independence] and the Partido de la Independencia, [PPI - Puerto Rican Independence party], was led by the prisoners of the Adjustment Center, who now serve sentences at the state's new federal prison.

When even this failed to stop the independentistas, the government organized armed street demonstrations in communities throughout the island.

The largest and most sustained demonstration of the history of Puerto Rico's independence movement took place here Sunday, Sept. 12, with an estimated attendance of about 80,000 people or one-tenth of the island's population. It was the largest mass movement ever participated in by Puerto Ricans in Puerto Rico. The demonstration, organized by the Movimiento Pro Independencia [MILITANT - Movement for Independence] and the Partido de la Independencia, [PPI - Puerto Rican Independence party], was led by the prisoners of the Adjustment Center, who now serve sentences at the state's new federal prison.

When even this failed to stop the independentistas, the government organized armed street demonstrations in communities throughout the island.

The largest and most sustained demonstration of the history of Puerto Rico's independence movement took place here Sunday, Sept. 12, with an estimated attendance of about 80,000 people or one-tenth of the island's population. It was the largest mass movement ever participated in by Puerto Ricans in Puerto Rico. The demonstration, organized by the Movimiento Pro Independencia [MILITANT - Movement for Independence] and the Partido de la Independencia, [PPI - Puerto Rican Independence party], was led by the prisoners of the Adjustment Center, who now serve sentences at the state's new federal prison.

When even this failed to stop the independentistas, the government organized armed street demonstrations in communities throughout the island.