

DATA ON GISELA MANDEL FOR PUBLICITY PURPOSES

Gisela Mandel will speak on "The European Student Movement, East and West." She has followed the rising student radicalism throughout Europe attentively and at first hand. She was an eye-witness of the famous battle of the barricades between the Sorbonne students and police in Paris on the night of May 10-11 and wrote a stirring account of it which was printed throughout the world.

Gisela Mandel has an M.A. degree in philosophy and sociology in Hamburg University. She was active in the formation of the German Socialist Student Federation (SDS) and is a friend of Rudi Dutschke and other leaders of the radical student youth organizations in Western Europe.

She has visited Cuba twice, lectured on Cuba at four West German universities; and wrote an introduction to the German edition of Sweezy and Huberman's "Anatomy of a Revolution." She has conducted sociological studies in India and has written extensively on that country.

She is married to the noted Marxist economist, Ernest Mandel, who is speaking this fall at leading American universities from coast to coast as well as being a principal invited foreign guest at the Socialist Scholars Conference at Rutgers.
