"Give Business All It Demands, Nothing to Labor"—Congress

The senators who defeated the Kilgore bill contended that the annual cost of the bill, which was estimated at between $100 million and $150 million, would be ruinous to the nation's economy. The Kilgore bill, if enacted, would have increased the cost of living for all Americans and would have put the country on a path of inflation and economic destruction.

The accumulation of debt and the growing national debt have been a major concern for American policymakers. The Kilgore bill would have further increased the national debt, which would have put a strain on the economy and led to increased inflation.

The Kilgore bill would have undermined the credibility of the government and the stability of the economy. If enacted, it would have sent a signal to creditors and investors that the government was not willing to act responsibly and could not be trusted to handle its finances.

The Kilgore bill would have also had serious implications for the international economy. If enacted, it would have increased the cost of living for Americans and made it more difficult for them to compete in the global marketplace. This would have had a negative impact on the economy of the United States and the world as a whole.

The final vote on the Kilgore bill was close, with the Democrats in control of the Senate and the Republicans in control of the House. The vote in the Senate was 51-49, with 51 votes needed to pass the bill. In the House, the bill passed by a vote of 218-210.

The Kilgore bill was ultimately defeated, but the debate it sparked raised important questions about the role of government in the economy and the balance between economic growth and social welfare.

LABOR MUSTER FOR POST-WAR SECURITY NOW!

Congress Hands Business 100 Billion War Loan

LACTOR ACTION has issued a few warnings on the "lethargy" of the industrial plants, the "procrastination" of the Federal Government in issuing orders for the mobilization of the workers, and the "boneheadedness" of the employers in refusing to cooperate with the government in the war effort.

The bill, sponsored by the War Labor Board, was introduced by Representatives William M. Colmer (Democrat, Mississippi) and the late Representative John A. Winder (Republican, Pennsylvania). The bill was passed by the House of Representatives and signed into law by President Roosevelt on August 28, 1944.

The bill was enacted to prevent the recurrence of the labor strife and work stoppages that had characterized the immediate post-war period. The bill was aimed at ensuring that the economic stability of the country would not be threatened by labor disputes.

Passed in the Senate, the bill received the support of the Senate and the House of Representatives. The bill was signed into law by President Roosevelt on August 28, 1944.
