LSE students expose 'get tough' plans

From MARTIN SHAW

Students at the London School of Economics, who occupied parts of the Senate House from Monday to Wednesday in opposition to a suspension of the Accreditation of Courses, have been warned by the immediate threat of penalties and the possibility of erasure upon failure to vacate

The strike is at the crossroads. The success of the dispute depends on the rank and file’s ability to control the negotiations

EDITORIAL

The Ford Strike is at the crossroads. The success of the dispute depends on the rank and file’s ability to control the negotiations

The Ford management is in a position to win the battle against such measures in their college. The occupation vote by the students against the closure of the college is a vital way of keeping in touch with every student.

The agreements are at Henry Weight's rolling mill at Wentworth, with the Continental Oil refinery at Wellingborough, and with the Upper Clyde Shipbuilders (see story on back page)

The management has accepted the agreement in principle, but the workers are still on strike. The strike must be spread.

The Ford workers must act as equals against the Ford management. The strike must be spread.

The Ford workers must not be broken. The strike must be spread.

Government cooperation

For example, agreements may be made legally binding.

This would mean that the workers at Ford could be faced with a binding agreement which they have not even seen before.

Already there has been much co-operation between the Ford management and the Department of Employment and Productivity. Indeed, the 'secret memorandum' of the Department of Employment and Productivity (which was published in Socialist Worker last week) was drawn up in consultation with Barbara Castle's Department.

The Ford fight is a political fight. It is against the type of proposal to terrorise the workers into submission. The strike is a battle for the workers to win.

For example, agreements may be made legally binding.

This would mean that the workers at Ford could be faced with a binding agreement which they have not even seen before.

Mass meetings vital

Leaflets and propaganda on a massive scale are required in order to consolidate support and to spread feeling for the Ford workers. The strike is a vital way of keeping in touch with every student.

A further point of great importance is the need for links between shop stewards, not only nationally but also internationally. The Ford Motor Co is a giant international capitalist firm. It has factories throughout Western Europe and it has stated that its future development will be made with an eye on the 'labour situation'.

In other words the company will try to divert production to areas where workers are organised or unwilling to fight back.

The Ford workers will be able to assert working class interests through their capitalistic system.

A penny at the library — is this the only way to help struggling authors?

by ETHEL MANNIN

A small royalty on the number of his titles stocked by publishers

Before A. P. Herbert there was no one to listen to the literary work of the important novelist. A penny on every book of his... and the authors were not interested. The book trade except payment in choosing whom they desired, was deplorable. As far as is possible, it is always a matter of good fortune for the interested public.

Because books cost more in the libraries of the country, whose royalties are usually paid to the royalty publishers, there is a benefit by higher prices which, however, they may be paid to the libraries of the country, instead of a benefit. The publisher is not only not in the interest of the country, but is sometimes done to ensure authors some sort of financial support, and its importance is shown by the high prices.

At present nothing is more to be feared than an attempt to improve the quality of books, as there is no need to do so. People are used to reading books, and it is not necessary to buy them, if they are in the proper price of books. What the author of books is actually doing is to make them more attractive to the public.

The New York Times, which is the best newspaper in the world, is now publishing books that talk about them, and it is more than a little of a surprise.

Nixon's new line

The new Nixon government has come into office, and one of its first acts has been to increase the number of books published in the United States. Gary Hart, the new Secretary of the Navy, has already committed a couple of books which he himself has written, and it is expected that they will be followed by other books.

The new government has also taken steps to encourage the publication of books about the Vietnam war. The government has announced that it will provide funds to support the publication of books about the war, and it is expected that this will result in an increase in the number of books on the subject.

Continue the struggle

The Vietnam war has continued, and there is no sign that it will end soon. The United States has increased its involvement in the war, and it is expected that the fighting will continue for some time. The war has caused a great deal of suffering, and it is hoped that it will come to an end soon.

Revolution goes on

The Vietnamese people are fighting for their freedom, and they are not willing to give up their struggle. They are demanding an end to the war and the establishment of a democratic government.

Prop deals: attack on shareholders

Crisp DAVISON's article (February 23) calls for shareholders to be involved in the decision-making process against productivity deals. But the transaction is still in work from one industry to another. It is not possible to lay down a formula that can be used in every circumstance.

It is important to recognize that productivity deals, however ruthless, can still be carried out. They are the opposite of the society that the government, in order to improve the quality of their products, demands.

On the contrary, the deals are, in a sense, a weapon against the boss, who is not necessarily a revolutionary socialist, is assumed by the workers to be the cause of the suffering of the workers. Because these conditions are assumed to be the result of the boss, the workers, by means of the strike, demand that the boss be removed from the company. Youth have something to beef about

From Paul Walton

Durham—the city's first picket parties were organized for many years ago on the Durham Lime Works, workers and students took part in campaigns initiated by the local students' union and demanded a site for a new social centre.

The background to the demand is a long-standing conflict between the local council and the Durham and South Tyne Heritage Trust, who want to build a new cultural centre in the middle of the town. The council has been trying to redevelop the Lime Works site for several years, but the residents have strongly opposed the plans. The council has faced numerous legal challenges and has been forced to abandon several plans.

The Durham Lime Works site is a historically significant location, and many residents have expressed concern about the potential loss of this heritage site for new development.

The council has been unable to agree on a suitable site for the new cultural centre, and this has led to frequent disputes with the residents. In recent years, there have been several protests and demonstrations against the council's plans, with many residents expressing concern about the impact of the development on the local community.

The demonstrators drove their bulls onto the school premises and raced with them around the land. The police acted swiftly to prevent any damage to the school property. The demonstrations caused a great deal of disruption, and it took several hours for the police to restore order.

The students had been protesting against the closure of the school, which they believed was a result of budget cuts. The school had been facing financial difficulties, and the closure was seen as a threat to the future of the school.
