May Day: strike against anti-union laws

EDITORIAL

WITH MAY DAY now only a day away, a strike against anti-union laws cannot be delayed any longer. It is clear that whatever the outcome of the strike, it will be a major victory for the working class. The struggle for socialism is gaining momentum.

The proposed legislation to undermine the trade union movement is the result of the entire policy of this class-divided anti-union government. For five years now the British economy has been in ruins, and the working class has been left at the mercy of the bosses.

For five years the government have shown, clearly and surely, that their only interest is in the interests of the British capitalist class. Welfare is to be abolished. A few local government teams may be shut, but rents have had to be raised so much that they have lowered the standard of living of hundreds of thousands of workers, and not just bad.

Who's interested?

All this is being done in the name of the 'national interest'. What is this national interest? It was the national interest that the seamen's attempts to maintain the appalling conditions of work should be ruled and blamed on a handful of agitators. This wage should be frozen for over a week, while profits and profits soared.

The Castle, Wilson, Jenkins, Short and Benn have been on a wildcat of the Labour government. This was not an 'error' which the government could have avoided. They are the only people of the Labour Party for years before it came to power. In this direction. The problem is that when employers can take a walk outside the window. The struggle for socialism is gaining momentum. We already know what the Labour government or which broadsides. It's a slow process and the officials in the more conservative unions are not going to be turned into policemen overnight.

Police agent

In this possibility which the Labour government has put forward, the strike is in aid of trade union law. The strike is to diminish the power of the working class and to finish its strike at any cost. The strike is in aid of the Labour government's intention to make the strike effective.

Outsider

When the police advance, secret police officers are to be deployed on the streets. The police are to be deployed to keep the strikers out. The police are to be deployed to keep the strikers from going back to work.

The police are to be deployed to keep the strikers from going back to work. But it is a slow process and the officials in the more conservative unions are not going to be turned into policemen overnight.

Back page

WOLVERHAMPTON - 2,000 are expected to march on Sunday (April 27) in the Black-white Unity Mobilization against racism in the heart of Stourbridge.

Support for the mobilisation has poured in from many parts of the country, and the call to come to Wolverhampton has obviously struck a chord. Numerous support has come from branches of the Independent Workers Association of India, but local groups of the International Marxist Group, Labour Party Young Socialists, CND and SUC have also rallied to the call.

A special bus has been promised from as far afield as Aberystwyth and students of Oxford University are to be transported to Wolverhampton.

Certainty rank and file socialists are in a majority of 3,000 march on the streets of Wolverhampton tomorrow. They are planning a march against racist attacks and racism, with meetings starting at 8.30 am at St. Anne's Hall, Flatford.}

Police terror in Bodgee

Eamonn McCann and Sean Reid

DERBY: The moderate lead- ing of the police strike has been swamped last week by police action in Bodgee. The strike was called in protest at the move to establish a new police station in the town. The town council had already expressed its opposition to the move, but the police went ahead with the plans.

The police attack developed after a large march on Saturday was dispersed by the police with tear gas and water cannon. At least three people were injured in the clashes.

Riot

The police were apparently trying to prevent a demonstration by the National Union of Students in support of the striking police in Bodgee.

The police also made arrests during the demonstration, but no details were available as the paper was going to press.

Slogan

The slogan of the striking police is "Down with the Police!" - and the next police to be attacked will be up and against the police. The police are the bulwark of the ruling class and their support is essential for the maintenance of the capitalist system. The police are therefore, an integral part of the capitalist system.

The police are the bulwark of the ruling class and their support is essential for the maintenance of the capitalist system. The police are therefore, an integral part of the capitalist system.

The police are the bulwark of the ruling class and their support is essential for the maintenance of the capitalist system. The police are therefore, an integral part of the capitalist system.

The police are the bulwark of the ruling class and their support is essential for the maintenance of the capitalist system. The police are therefore, an integral part of the capitalist system.

The police are the bulwark of the ruling class and their support is essential for the maintenance of the capitalist system. The police are therefore, an integral part of the capitalist system.

The police are the bulwark of the ruling class and their support is essential for the maintenance of the capitalist system. The police are therefore, an integral part of the capitalist system.

The police are the bulwark of the ruling class and their support is essential for the maintenance of the capitalist system. The police are therefore, an integral part of the capitalist system.

The police are the bulwark of the ruling class and their support is essential for the maintenance of the capitalist system. The police are therefore, an integral part of the capitalist system.

The police are the bulwark of the ruling class and their support is essential for the maintenance of the capitalist system. The police are therefore, an integral part of the capitalist system.

The police are the bulwark of the ruling class and their support is essential for the maintenance of the capitalist system. The police are therefore, an integral part of the capitalist system.
Delegates to the National Convention of the Left must decide between pressure groups and building a new workers' party

Welfare work or revolutionary politics——the choice for the Left

BY PETER SEDGWICK

Yet the conference itself will include the major unions and other organizations, such as the National Council for Civil Liberties and the National Council for Coal, that have been excluded from the convention as a whole. For example, the problem of the General Electric workers in the United States has received no mention at all. However, even where the full extent of the debate is not yet clear, the discussion has highlighted many important issues.

In the context of the current economic crisis, the conference's discussion of the need for a more radical approach to welfare work is particularly timely. The government's policies have led to a significant increase in poverty and inequality, and this has been exacerbated by the current economic crisis. The conference recognised that welfare work must be seen as part of a broader strategy to transform society, and that it must be linked to the struggle for a socialist future.

The conference also agreed that welfare work must be based on a clear political perspective. This means that workers' organisations must be active in the struggle for political power, and that they must be prepared to take direct action when necessary. The conference concluded that the struggle for a socialist future must be based on the unity of all sections of the working class, and that this unity must be built on a common understanding of the need for a socialist society.

The conference also discussed the importance of international solidarity. The conference recognised that the struggle for socialism is a world-wide struggle, and that the workers of the world must stand together to defeat the capitalist system. The conference concluded that international solidarity is essential to the success of the workers' movement, and that it must be based on a clear understanding of the need for a socialist world.

In conclusion, the conference agreed that welfare work must be based on a clear political perspective. Welfare work must be seen as part of a broader strategy to transform society, and it must be linked to the struggle for a socialist future. The conference also agreed that international solidarity is essential to the success of the workers' movement, and that it must be based on a clear understanding of the need for a socialist world.

Let's build a new workers' party!

---

The conference also discussed the importance of international solidarity. The conference recognised that the struggle for socialism is a world-wide struggle, and that the workers of the world must stand together to defeat the capitalist system. The conference concluded that international solidarity is essential to the success of the workers' movement, and that it must be based on a clear understanding of the need for a socialist world.

The conference also discussed the importance of international solidarity. The conference recognised that the struggle for socialism is a world-wide struggle, and that the workers of the world must stand together to defeat the capitalist system. The conference concluded that international solidarity is essential to the success of the workers' movement, and that it must be based on a clear understanding of the need for a socialist world.

The conference also discussed the importance of international solidarity. The conference recognised that the struggle for socialism is a world-wide struggle, and that the workers of the world must stand together to defeat the capitalist system. The conference concluded that international solidarity is essential to the success of the workers' movement, and that it must be based on a clear understanding of the need for a socialist world.

The conference also discussed the importance of international solidarity. The conference recognised that the struggle for socialism is a world-wide struggle, and that the workers of the world must stand together to defeat the capitalist system. The conference concluded that international solidarity is essential to the success of the workers' movement, and that it must be based on a clear understanding of the need for a socialist world.

The conference also discussed the importance of international solidarity. The conference recognised that the struggle for socialism is a world-wide struggle, and that the workers of the world must stand together to defeat the capitalist system. The conference concluded that international solidarity is essential to the success of the workers' movement, and that it must be based on a clear understanding of the need for a socialist world.
Dubeck's downfall: now it's back to 'orthodox' repression...

by CHRIS HARMAN
who has just returned from Prague

The London dock strike, 1889 part, the growing urgency that sparked the first day in 1989 is a reproach. The Prague Spring was a time of hope, of possibilities. But what happened after the invasion? The捷克斯洛伐克, Dubcek's successor in Prague, was more willing to compromise with the Soviet Union, and the USSR took control of the Czechoslovak government. The Soviet invasion marked the end of the Prague Spring and the beginning of a period of repression and control in Czechoslovakia.

DUBCEK balancing act

The invasion led to the dissolution of the Czechoslovak government and the imposition of direct Soviet control. The Czechoslovak Communist Party was dissolved, and political rights were restricted. The invasion had a profound impact on Czech society, and it is still remembered as a time of great political and social tension.

With the removal of Dubcek, the imposition of direct Soviet control and the lasting effects of the invasion, Czechoslovakia has never been the same. The country has struggled to find its place in the world, and its political and economic systems have been transformed in the years since the invasion. Today, Czechoslovakia is a member of the European Union, and its citizens enjoy many of the same freedoms and opportunities as people in other European countries. However, the legacy of the invasion continues to shape the country's politics and society, and it remains a topic of great interest and debate.
BUILDING DEAL PUTS SHACKLES ON STEWARTS

Dave Warby ASPD
THE NATIONAL Federation of Building Workers faces trouble over a new "working rule" which has agreed in the latest negotiations. The claim it puts under the virtual control of the employers.

Under the new rule, which is an amendment to the national agreement covering the employment and procedural arrangements, employers will have to be recognised by the local workroom provided for automatic recognition, they have been given a credit. The new arrangement will be that once a site is recognised, the employer will no longer have to provide for the establishment. The union will not allow the employer to move the site from the establishment. The move, then, would not be as in the past when the employers were able to move the site from the establishment.

SERIOUS

Concerns about the level of recognition, which is likely to have particular significance for the building industry which operates in a similar manner to that of the building trade, and for the running of workrooms, have been highlighted by the amendment to the national agreement. The change in the arrangement means that the employers are not required to provide for automatic recognition.

There has been no attempt to explain the change in the arrangement, and there is the risk that the employers are not being given due recognition for their work.

Plessey women end pay strike

Lionel Sims

IFPLOP: Women workers at the Plessey electronic engineering factories voted on Thursday to return to work after a strike over conditions and staffs, and the employers are now paying their wages.

The strike was called by the Plessey workers' committee and is the result of a dispute over conditions and staffs. The Plessey workers had been on strike since April 1st. They wanted to abolish piecework and to be paid for "a consolidated" system that would end the existing differences in wages.

The strike committee had declared the strike illegal, and the employers had given the workers the option to continue with the strike.

Strict discipline

Sums of redundancy have involved checking all the machines on the production line, which are all critical to the company's main effort in the next two years or two years' worth of improving efficiency. To achieve this, the company has paid for a "cleaning" of the system and to the consolidation of the staff, so that workers were removed from the streets.

BLATANT

The Students' Union meets at the Plessey factory on Thursday, which made the company's main effort in the next two years or two years' worth of improving efficiency. To achieve this, the company has paid for a "cleaning" of the system and to the consolidation of the staff, so that workers were removed from the streets.

CRUCIAL

The students' union was asked to discuss plans for the organisation of the students in other universities to demonstrate the dissipation of the campaign in the case of political victimisation.

Both were sacked merely for showing their support for the anti-South African sanctions campaign. The university was also guilty of "blatantly" refusing to consider students' demands for the organisation of the students in other universities to demonstrate the dissipation of the campaign in the case of political victimisation.

Dangerous man

LAST MINUTE

 inheritors of the 90s. Now that the once-great country is in the hands of the country that is the target of neglect, the country that paid for the increase.

MAY DAY STRIKE

To speed up the whole operation, the Union is asking to negotiate a settlement with the employers, and to try to ensure that the strike is settled. The strike is likely to be the first of its kind in the country, and the government is expected to be more than willing to negotiate with the employers.

The government's incomes policy, which has been widely welcomed by all sections of society, has also been transformed, with the government's incomes policy's most important changes being the establishment of a minimum wage and the establishment of a maximum wage. The government's incomes policy has also been transformed, with the government's incomes policy's most important changes being the establishment of a minimum wage and the establishment of a maximum wage.