For workers control and international socialism

March on Sunday

DERRY YOUTH CHALLENGE

POLICE STATE

Socialist Worker Reporters

ORANGE DAY in the Northern Ireland police state unstable in what looks like the start of a new phase of fighting. This is being worsened by the presence of a large number of English police, who have been sent to Derry to reinforce the loyalist paramilitary groups. The police have been accused of using excessive force and of targeting nationalist and Republican demonstrators.

Shots fired in village

In the small village of Knockauleen, shots were fired at the home of the mayor, who has been working with the nationalist community. The mayor was out of the house at the time, and no one was injured.

Wall of fire

In a nearby area, a wall of flames and smoke was set up to block the road leading to the police station. This was in response to the police raid on the nationalist community the night before.

Picket support appeal

STRIKING mechanical engineers at the North London machine manufacturers have appealed for support in their dispute. The workers have been on strike for almost a month, and the company has offered to give them back-pay if they return to work.

Airfix strikers get rough treatment from police

ONE HUNDRED and thirty Airfix employees have been arrested in a night-time raid on the factory. The workers were striking against the company's attempts to reduce their wages and benefits.

Airfix workers were on strike in the early hours of the morning, demanding better conditions and higher wages. The company had offered to raise wages by 5% and to restore some of the benefits that had been cut in the previous round of negotiations.

The strike had been called by the union, which represents the workers, and had been supported by the local community. The workers were determined to win their demands and were willing to continue the strike until their demands were met.

JONES

THE FREEZE

GETS PAY BOOST

MR AUBREY JONES has resigned from the post of postmaster and becomes chief executive of the British Postmasters' Union. He will receive a pay rise of £1,000 per annum.

Mr Jones is the ex-Tory MP for South Glamorgan, and has been a long-time critic of the Labour government's policies. His resignation is expected to cause a stir in the political world.

Summer break

On Tuesday he said he had to resign for health reasons, but there was no confirmation of this from the Labour government. Mr Jones has been a long-time critic of the government's policies, and his resignation is expected to cause a stir in the political world.

Mr Jones will get £1,000,000 in severance pay.
Arturo — the grocers’ boy who took the biscuit

THEATRE: PAUL FOOT

control of all the cities of America. The reactionary character of this movement is based on the political leaders of Inter-American Co-operative Union (AICUP), who is seen as being a tool of the bourgeoisie to maintain the status quo. The Arturo Auron movement is led by the bourgeoisie and is supported by the workers. The movement is fueled by the幻想 of the workers who are disillusioned with their leaders and their leaders' inability to address their demands for a better life. The movement is against the existing order and is supported by workers who are disillusioned with their leaders and their leaders' inability to address their demands for a better life.

SUSPICION

Less accurate are the sections dealing with the potential impact of the workers’ movement on the bourgeoisie. The bourgeoisie is portrayed as being threatened by the movement and is depicted as being afraid of the workers. However, the bourgeoisie is shown as being able to maintain control of the situation and its position in society. The bourgeoisie is shown as being able to maintain control of the situation and its position in society.

CONCERN

In the final analysis, the workers’ movement is presented as a threat to the existing order and is depicted as being able to bring about change. The bourgeoisie is shown as being able to maintain control of the situation and its position in society. The bourgeoisie is shown as being able to maintain control of the situation and its position in society.

The scene in the book was set in a town where the workers had been on strike for several months. The workers were demanding better wages and working conditions, but their demands were being ignored by the bourgeoisie. The bourgeoisie was shown as being afraid of the workers and was willing to do anything to maintain its control of the situation. The bourgeoisie was shown as being afraid of the workers and was willing to do anything to maintain its control of the situation.

Behind the people

The British Socialists Party called for a general strike to be held on November 30th in order to support the workers. The strike was called to show solidarity with the workers and to demonstrate the workers' determination to fight for their rights. The strike was called to show solidarity with the workers and to demonstrate the workers' determination to fight for their rights. The strike was called to show solidarity with the workers and to demonstrate the workers' determination to fight for their rights.

Guns and tanks

As the military response was everywhere, the workers were able to hold their ground and maintain their position. In the end, the workers were able to force the bourgeoisie to make concessions and to agree to their demands for better wages and working conditions. The workers were able to force the bourgeoisie to make concessions and to agree to their demands for better wages and working conditions. The workers were able to force the bourgeoisie to make concessions and to agree to their demands for better wages and working conditions.
The CIR verdict at Birmid Qualcast is highly predictable: blame the unions

WHY FORD'S HATCHET MAN HAS GONE TO THE MIDLANDS...

From our Birmingham correspondent

LESLIE BLAKEMAN, 603 industrial

In Coventry the management claims that the unions have been cowed by the CIR report and that the struggle there has been successful in achieving a settlement.

The managing director, Mr. H. J. Black, has said that the company's management and workmen's union have reached an agreement that will ensure industrial peace for the next two years. The agreement includes a 5% pay increase for all employees, with an additional 2% merit increase for those who have been with the company for over five years.

Many strikes

In the last two years there have been many strikes in the group over various working conditions. In 1967 there were three weeks' strike of maintenance men at BAC, which eventually won a 10% increase.

During the same period the shareholder maintained a 70% increase for the workmen. And he has not even had to rely on the BAC for this, as a round of strikes was also fought in a factory in the district.

It was therefore not surprising that Ford workers got as much as 40% of Ford workers defeated him. At Browns

Join the International Socialists

Please send further details of the meetings and activities of the international socialists to

Name

Address
NEW FORD MOVE TO DISCIPLINE MEN MAY SPARK MILITANT ACTION

From a Ford Shop steward: Southampton

NEW ATTEMPTS TO DISCIPLINE Ford workers could spark off fresh militant action just three months after they returned to work following the long battle against the company’s attempt to remove their right to strike.

The men went back on the understanding that the most pressing of their problems would be quickly tackled. The most pressing of these was the drive to reconstitute the National Joint Negotiating Committee.

At present all the 22 unions at Ford vote each on the NJNC which means that small unions can veto the wishes of the giants, the Engineering and Post Office Workers, the Transport Workers.

Recognizing the democratic structure where the vote of each worker would be in proportion to his pay, they feel that a system would prevent officials from controlling the relationship of the men to the system.

Both the AEP and TWU have put forward proposals but they are being blocked by the National Joint Negotiating Committee who are anxious to maintain the status quo.

The position of all the unions is not yet clear but at the next NJNC meeting on July 13 there is a chance that some union officials hope to agree to any proposals from the NJNC meetings, which is nothing more than a reconfirmation of the current situation.

They argue that a strike would break up the Ford Shop Stewards and that their presence is vital to the smooth operation of the Ford operations.

The TUC disciplinary code, which has been used against Ford workers, would have no effect, it would make the situation worse for the management, and the Ford Shop Stewards and the TUC are both aware of this.

DANGER

The officials of one of the unions have warned that the Ford Shop Stewards may be present at the next meeting of the NJNC, and the Ford Shop Stewards may be present at the next meeting of the NJNC.

FOURTH LEFT SORT OUT DIFFERENCES

The French railway workers have struggled through a year of strike action to sort out the differences between the French Railways management and the Trade Unions.

On May 26, the French railway workers voted in favour of a 10% increase in wages, following a strike of 30,000 workers on May 15.

The strike was called to protest against the management’s decision to scrap the 10% increase in wages, which was agreed to by the management in December 1968.

The strike was supported by the CGT trade union, which represents the majority of French railway workers.

The French railway workers have a long history of strikes for better wages and working conditions.

The CGT trade union has been a strong advocate of workers’ rights and has been involved in many strikes in recent years.

The French railway workers have been inspired by the workers’ movements in other countries, such as the UK and the USA, and have drawn strength from their experiences.

The French railway workers have also been supported by the French government, which has provided financial aid to the railway workers during the strike.

The French railway workers have been able to achieve a significant victory in the strike, with the management agreeing to the workers’ demands for a 10% increase in wages.

The French railway workers have been able to build a strong and united movement, which has been able to resist the management’s attempts to break the strike.

The French railway workers have also been able to build a strong and united movement, which has been able to resist the management’s attempts to break the strike.

The French railway workers have also been able to build a strong and united movement, which has been able to resist the management’s attempts to break the strike.

The French railway workers have also been able to build a strong and united movement, which has been able to resist the management’s attempts to break the strike.