CAR MEN FIGHT THREAT TO JOB ORGANISATION

Union executives accept penalty clauses at Vauxhall

What we think

Tall MINERS have returned to work but their struggle is not over. Morestrikes will be launched. The men have taken to the streets. The Miners' National Union, which represents over 200,000 miners, said it would continue its fight for better pay and conditions. The British Labour government, which is facing a general election in May, has said it will support the miners' demands. However, the government has also warned that it will take action to ensure that strikes do not disrupt the country's economy.

The strikes have been ongoing for several weeks, with miners demanding a 20% increase in wages. The government has offered a 10% increase, which has been rejected by the miners. The government has also threatened to use its power to force the miners back to work, but this would be illegal under trade union law.

The miners' strike has brought many industries to a standstill. The British economy is in a recession, with unemployment rising. The government has said that the miners' strike is holding back the economy and that it will take action to bring the strike to an end.

The miners' strike is a symbol of the wider social and economic problems facing Britain. The government has been criticized for its austerity policies, which have led to cuts in public services and welfare benefits. The government has also been criticized for its policies towards the miners, which have been seen as an attempt to weaken the trade union movement.

Drive against anti-Zionists

From a Special Correspondent

The INTERNATIONAL authorities have said that there is no evidence of repression against the anti-Zionists in the Arab population of Israel. This follows an international condemnation of Israel's policy of severe repression against the Arab population of the occupied territories.

The Israeli government has said that it is necessary to maintain law and order in the Arab community. The authorities have said that there is no evidence of repression against the Arab population.

The international community has condemned the Israeli government's policies. The UN has called on Israel to stop the repression and to begin negotiations with the Arab community. The EU has also called on Israel to stop the repression.

National links needed

It does not mean that collaboration between Arab and Israeli communities is not needed. There are many people who want to work together to build a better future for all. There is a need for dialogue and cooperation between the two communities.

In the past, the Vauxhall management has succeeded in bringing together the workers from the different communities. The management has said that it is necessary to continue this work to build a more united community.

The management has also said that it is necessary to continue the efforts to build a more united community. The management has said that it is necessary to continue the efforts to build a more united community.
1919: a plea from Lloyd George and the mighty Triple Alliance collapsed

by RAYMOND CHALLINOR

MANY PEOPLE dismiss the prospect of a new world war as impossible. They say, "It will never happen here." They forget that 20 years ago, almost 100 years ago, it almost did happen here.

In 1919, the German government could not afford to be complacent. It knew that the First World War had ended with Germany's defeat. Lloyd George realized the German economy faced a severe economic crisis, and he was determined to take advantage of the situation.

The cabinet decided to raise the pressure on the German government. They wanted to ensure that Germany would not be able to pay reparations, which was a key issue in the post-war negotiations. They believed that if Germany was unable to pay, then it would not be able to afford to buy the food and resources it needed to maintain its army and navy.

The government hung on

Like Mr. Balfour, the government continued to demand for something to turn up. In the words of one of his colleagues, "We have no time for any's capacity to take anything less."

In the end, the government's strategy worked. The Allies agreed to a peace treaty, which included the reparations clause.

The government's strategy had worked, and they were able to ensure that Germany would be unable to pay the reparations it owed. This ensured that Germany would not be able to afford to maintain its army and navy.

We are at your mercy

He was quite frank with the public. He said: "I am not going to make this a matter of religion."

He was referring to theTriple Alliance, a military alliance between Germany, Austria-Hungary, and Italy. He believed that this alliance was no longer relevant, and that it was time to change the country's foreign policy.

Therefore, any serious struggle over wages soon developed into a struggle with the capitalist class. The workers had only one way to gain their cause because the military power was greater than the factory power. And the employers were constantly advising workers to go through the existing procedures.

CP: down the slipp

by HARRY JONES

The industrial record of the Communist Party in the field of politics is disappointing. It is true that in the years since 1919, the party has grown out of the mists of the war and that it has organized more than a million trade unionists in the Minority Movement of the 1920s.

The CP went on the slip which it had in 1920 when it adopted its programme the British Road to Socialism, which says that socialism can only be achieved through a peaceful international federation of the world based on the principle of co-operation and internationalism.

SILENT

One of the most sinister attacks on the workers was the Black Tom's campaign, which was carried out by the British government. It was carried out by the police, who claimed that they were doing it to protect the workers from the Black Tom's. There were no workers' councils in this campaign, which was carried out by the police and the government.

The CP is ironic in the situation in which the workers have been placed. It is ironic in the situation in which the workers have been placed.

Feared the rank and file

Paradoxically, the leadership of the CP in the trade unions is not the leadership of the Communist Party. The CP has always been the leader of the trade unions, and it is the leader of the Communist Party.

As President of the CP, it has always been the leader of the trade unions. It has always been the leader of the Communist Party. It has always been the leader of the trade unions.

SURVIVAL OF THE FITTEST: DR MORRIS UPDATES DARWIN

To add to the excitement of survival of the fittest, one can't help but wonder if natural selection plays a role in the evolution of human behavior. The concept of the "survival of the fittest" has been widely debated, with some arguing that it is a driving force in human evolution. However, recent studies suggest that other factors, such as cooperation and altruism, may also play a significant role in human evolution.

In conclusion, the theory of natural selection continues to be a subject of debate and research. As new evidence emerges, our understanding of human evolution is likely to evolve as well. TCM
MINERS GO BACK—but united by NEW ANGER AND MENTALITY

JOE KENYON

THE YORKSHIRE COAL STRIKE has been called off. In Barleyam on Saturday, the Yorkshire area council of the National Union of Mineworkers (NUM) recommended that the strikers return to work on the understanding that Vic Feetham, the general secretary of the TUC, would set up an enquiry into the disappearance of the pit top men.

Many delegates again raised the call for the resumption of the negotiations with the Union of South Africa Union, which are scheduled for next month. The new talks would be aimed at settling the dispute.

The strike was a short-lived affair, lasting only three days. Many miners were said to be angry about the way in which the strike had been called off, and there were reports of violence in some areas.

The immediate problem of the miners was how to get back to work. They were told that the strike was a protest against the abolition of pit top men. However, the miners were not sure how long the strike would last, and many were afraid that it would not be worth their while to go back to work.

Double dealing

The miners have been accused of 'double dealing' by some of their own leaders. It is alleged that the miners have been paid off and are now working for the government. The miners deny these accusations.

However, the miners are still determined to uphold their claim for fair pay and working conditions. They are planning to hold further protests and strikes if their demands are not met.

Last week Socialist Worker produced a two-page special miners' issue that was sold to all the major mining areas.

LAUNCHER—Production workers on strike for 100 per cent membership. The plant is a subsidiary of Monasit, the main electrical company based in the USA.

The strike is against the management's decision to close the plant and transfer some of the production to their own site. The workers believe that the closure will result in job losses and a reduction in their wages.

It has been stated that the workers have been offered a 10 per cent salary increase, but they are not satisfied with this offer.

The strike is also supported by the National Union of Miners.
