WAGES REVOLT SNOWBALLS

Thousands do this to bosses and government

by Chris Harman

IN INDUSTRY after industry over the last few weeks masses of workers have been learning the lesson—militancy pays. It is not only that they have been sufficiently motivated to strike, they have been sufficiently united to go on strike. For years the small worker has been told by the bosses that he cannot strike, that he cannot win. But he has been learning that he can, that the insurance policy of militancy is a winning one.

This Christmas there were strikes by busineses, supermarket workers who have previously been very reluctant. Large numbers of workers have gone on strike for better pay and conditions.

Since then there have been strikes by busineses, supermarket workers who have previously been very reluctant. Large numbers of workers have gone on strike for better pay and conditions.

IN THE TRADES, workers have also learned to use their strength. In the clothing industry, the pay and conditions of workers have been called into question. The moulded patterns, which have been in use for over 50 years, have been replaced by machine-made patterns. This has led to a decrease in production and an increase in wages for workers. The new patterns have also been heavily criticized by the workers.

Those who work in the clothing industry have been telling their stories to their friends and family. They have been saying that the new patterns are not only bad for their health, but also for the quality of their work. They have been saying that the new patterns are only being used because the managers want to cut costs and increase profits.

The workers have been telling their stories to the press, and the press has been very interested. The stories have been covered in the local papers, and even in the national papers. The workers have been very successful in getting their stories heard.

The workers have also been successful in getting their demands heard. They have been demanding better pay and conditions, and they have been getting what they want. The workers have been successful in getting their demands heard. They have been demanding better pay and conditions, and they have been getting what they want.

Ford workers debt of gratitude to Swansea

By John Deason (TGWU)

A SOCIALIST WORKER pamphlet on a proposed new pay scheme for the CAV-LSU unit in Acton, North London, has been met with an attempted ban on its distribution by the management. But more than 500 copies of the pamphlet were sold inside the factory, despite efforts to discourage workers from buying it.

The Acton factory is part of the controlling capitalist class to key sections of the car industry. The management has proposed a new pay scheme which is higher than the previous one, but workers are concerned.

Significantly, the new piece rate system would cut pay by less than one rate point on some jobs; and in grading - in other words, job - workers would still remain in separate grades.

The pamphlet has been described as a "moral victory" by the workers, but it is only a start. The battle is far from over.

The Indian Workers' Marist-Labor Movement has published an excellent analysis of the opportunities in India. The pamphlet, "The Boys and the Girl," by E. O'Flynn, discusses the importance of education in the lives of children and the potential for change.

Significantly, the movement's goal of education is a key factor in developing a socialist society. The pamphlet also emphasizes the need for solidarity and cooperation among workers.

CAPITALISM has no end, it is a process of crisis and resistance. The ruling class is trying to impose its will and power, but the working class is resisting. The working class is the true engine of the revolution, and its resistance is the key to the future.

Almost every day a construction worker dies in Britain

Colin Barker talks to a militant shop steward

AT NINE O’CLOCK one morning last October a triple failure in the critical supplies to a new steam boiler at Shell’s Petrochemical plant at Carniggill, near Manchester, created an emergency situation for 20 minutes.

The emergency “ended” with an explosion in the furnace chamber.

The sudden expansion of gases which had built up in a steel section bigger than a tennis court caused the boiler to blow out of the furnace chamber.

The hot gases carried out of the furnace chamber at the rate of a quarter of a million cubic feet of gases a minute were turned 20 feet to the groundat the blast.

The young boiler, 18-year-old Michael Whitaker, who was knocked across the boiler by the first explosion, was hit in the abdomen and abdominal cavity by the blast.

The blast weakened 100-foot high pipes at the site of the explosion, and the blast weakened the boiler, and the boiler weakened the steam pipes which feed the steel mill with steam.

The boiler exploded, killing Michael Whitaker, and six other workmen were killed by the blast.

The blast killed six other workmen and injured over 20 others, including seven who were seriously injured.

THIS is the conclusion of an investigation into the explosion which caused the collapse of the boiler at the Shell plant.

The investigation was carried out by a special team of experts who were appointed by the Health and Safety Executive.

The explosion, which occurred on October 27, 1976, was the result of a failure in the design and construction of the boiler, and the boiler was then the biggest in the world.

The boiler was designed and constructed by the firm of Balfour Beatty, and the firm was a major contractor for the Shell plant.

The boiler was designed to operate at a pressure of 140 atmospheres, and the firm did not follow the recommended pressure limits for the boiler.

The explosion was caused by a combination of factors, including the failure of the boiler design, the failure of the boiler construction, and the failure of the firm to follow the recommended pressure limits for the boiler.

The investigation team found that the boiler was not designed to operate at the pressure of 140 atmospheres, and that the boiler had been constructed without proper testing.

The investigation team also found that the firm of Balfour Beatty had not followed the recommended pressure limits for the boiler, and that the boiler had been constructed without proper testing.

The investigation team recommended that the firm of Balfour Beatty should be held responsible for the explosion, and that the Health and Safety Executive should take action against the firm.

The investigation team recommended that the Health and Safety Executive should take action against the firm of Balfour Beatty, and the firm should be held responsible for the explosion.

The Health and Safety Executive has accepted the recommendations of the investigation team, and the firm of Balfour Beatty has agreed to pay compensation to the families of the six workmen who were killed in the explosion.

The payment of compensation to the families of the six workmen who were killed in the explosion is a major step forward in the fight for justice for the victims of industrial accidents.

The Allenby Bridge: Israeli soldiers and a Jordanian policeman haggle over the fate of Palestinian refugees made homeless by the drive for land of the Zionist state of Israel. Zionism, says STEPHEN MARKS, did not seek to solve the oppression of the Jews by fighting their oppressors. It collaborated with the oppressors to drive the Palestinians from their land and created a racially exclusive country.

Zionism: enemy of Arab and Jew

JEWS IN THE WEST have been victims of racism for generations, Palestine was no exception. The unspeakable atrocities of Nazism in the Second World War forced Zionism to claim to be a Jewish national movement which aimed to solve the problems of centuries of persecution by establishing a Jewish state. As a result, many in the Jewish community were surprised to see that the left began to criticise Zionism even when they regretted the close links of Israel with American imperialism. And Zionism, cashing in on this attitude, labelled all opposition to it as "anti-Semitism".

But Zionism did not seek to solve the oppression of the Jews by fighting back against the oppressors. Instead, the Zionists had an agreement with the British government and in exchange for protection in the context of controlling a country, Palestine, whose native inhabitants were deprived of their country without their consent.

Incapable

Zionism shares with anti-Semitism the assumption that the Jews are incapable of living as a minority with non-Jews because racism towards minorities is part of "human nature". The founder of Zionism, Theodor Herzl, wrote in 1896, in "The Jewish State": "The Jew is a minority in every country and that is the nature of the Jew." He continued: "...the Jew is a minority in every country. The Jew is a minority in his own country..." In the context of Zionism, the Jews of the Diaspora are part of the global Jewish community, not a part of any particular country. Zionism seeks to establish a Jewish state in order to safeguard the Jewish people from the dangers of living in a minority state.

Abandoned by their "leaders" and terrorised by the counter-terrorists (the map responsible), many Palestinians have turned to the Palestinian Authority for help. But the Palestinian Authority has been unable to provide effective protection for the Palestinians. The Authority has been weakened by internal divisions and the difficulties of governing a territory inhabited by rival factions. The Authority has also been unable to deal with the Israeli military occupation, which has hindered the Authority's efforts to build a viable state.

The North of Ireland is once again the scene of widespread violence. Although the British government and its policies have lost much of their interest in what happens in the Six Counties, the situation there is becoming critically important. When the leaders of the two countries meet, the issue of civil rights is one that cannot be overlooked. The threat of violence is always present, whether it be as an attempt to show solidarity or as a method of resolving political differences.

Unemployment: the situation worsens for Catholic and Protestant workers.

The worsening of the situation in Northern Ireland carries with it the danger of a campaign of selected violence against the left. The situation is now so serious that direct action is encouraged by the political leaders of the Catholic and Protestant communities.

Militants targeted

At the same time, the militant republicans have been targeted. The GRT has been shown to be a political group, not a terrorist organization. The responsibility for the recent violence lies with the Provisional IRA. The British government has failed to take action against the real culprits, the loyalist paramilitaries, who have been responsible for most of the recent violence.

Scottish spats get an grip on grading scheme

Scottish contractors fear the imposition of a grade of workmanship that could cost them thousands of pounds. Industry bosses, who have already been warned of the potential for huge losses, are now faced with the proposal of a grading scheme that could mean the difference between profit and loss.

The grading scheme, which was announced by the government, is intended to ensure that all work is completed to the highest standard. However, it has been met with widespread resistance from the construction industry.

The Scottish Government is set to introduce the scheme, which will see all construction projects graded from A to E, with A being the highest grade and E the lowest. The grades will be based on a point system, with each project awarded points for different criteria such as quality of workmanship, safety, and environmental impact.

Critics of the scheme argue that it will lead to increased costs for builders and could create delays in project delivery. They also claim that the grading system is overly complex and difficult to implement.

The Scottish Government has defended the scheme, stating that it is necessary to ensure that all construction projects are completed to the required standard. They argue that the scheme will help to reduce costs for the public and will improve the quality of workmanship across the industry.
