FOR WORKERS POWER

KICK OUT THE BOSSSES
How 'T. Dan Wilson' ratted on the working class

by Paul Foot

ON 16 OCTOBER 1964, Mr T Dan Smith, leader of the Labour Party, said in a New Zealand Parliament that the new government was too radical and that the country was in need of some kind of leadership.

He was calling for a call to denuclearise the area.

The call came late to the Labour movement.

He said that the new government should be watched closely as it tried to implement its policies.

Dan Smith had run the Labour Party's election campaign, in conditions of intense media attention and television interviews.

He was handed a new government as a result of the 1969 election, which the new Labour Party had won.

Harold Wilson, in September 1964, had gone to Yalta on a 5-day visit to discuss the future of the country.

In his speech, he spoke of the need for a new government, which he said was needed to provide the necessary leadership and direction for the country.

Labour's policies towards the working class were to be changed. He said that the Labour Party should be more in line with the views of the people.

He said that the Labour Party should take the lead in the struggle against the ruling class and that the government should be held accountable for its actions.

The Labour Party should also be more active in the fight against the ruling class and its policies, he said.

He called for a new government that would stand up to the ruling class and that would be more in line with the views of the people.

'Vote, vote, vote for Bonar Law, vote, vote, vote for his cronies too. Then we'll buy a pension, and we'll have the Germans in, and we'll see the Kaiser any more.'

THE WORDS of the song were explained to the Socialist Workers' Club. As one of the vast throng of kids following the Great Pensions wagon that crawled through the streets, they got the Glaswegian song with the best.

'VOTE FOR BONAR LAW' explained the posters plastered all over the wagon.

A political experience. The son of an Irish immigrant, I was born and brought up with a hand in the pocket, and I believe was a Thomas (receiving back again the dear old land to save). The NWP has left no question was political: it was a sheet of fields.

I went onto browsing with the new arrivals, tuned to the radio, and with a father, a coal-miner, a Fellow Christian, his response was a thunderclap: 'That miserable man at the time of the 1914 war. There is a put in bell deep enough, nor a fire hot enough for the scum.'

True nature

As I said, it was my first introduction to the world of Bonar Law's great achievement of 1912: the event that brought together the British and the French. In 1912, the event the US Department of the Navy. Peace was declared to all the world. A cooperation of national control of coal mines.

The NWP was not just well organized and they had implied faith in the Trade Union movement.

WENDEL HENRY writes of a martyr of the international labour movement

Wobbly' Joe Hill — gunned down by America's rulers

'There is power, there is power, in the hands of the wrenched. When they stand, hand in hand, There is power — in the North, that makes true power. One can but ascribe to the national consciousness.'

1 PEVER the Industrial Workers of the World's hopes and aspirations. It was a demonstration of what was possible in this simple heroic song — There is Power in a Union.

Joe Hill had lived his life in 1910 at a convention in Chicago. It was a broad organization embracing socialists, anarchists, trade unionists and revolutionaries.

It stood for industrial unionism at the time, and the American Federation of Labour, with its craft unions and craft collaboration, a policy of cooperation between workers and employers.

It had pledged its unwavering support for the class struggle 'that must go on until the workers of the world are emancipated from the servitude of the capitalist system of the production of the world is in the hands of the proletariat, not the wage system' — these were the fight for Joe Hill was shot.

The author of the song was Joe Hill. Joe Hill was a Swedish-born laborer who came to the US and worked as a lumberjack and a coal miner. He wrote many popular songs, including 'The Wobblies,' which speak to the struggles of working people.

Drawer and tunnel. The Glasgow Evening Citizen was anxious. They expressed sympathy with the miners but advised them not to act until the union in order to avoid bad blood.

Whatever the miners' view of this strike, they did not have time to say, for they were locked inside their demands by the strikers in the Triple Alliance, hanged and executed by the police, inflating a dockers and railwaymen. The Glasgow Evening Citizen was anxious. They expressed sympathy with the miners but advised them not to act until the union in order to avoid bad blood.

The dockers and railwaymen are not mentioned in this story, but they did have time to say, for they were locked inside their demands by the strikers in the Triple Alliance, hanged and executed by the police, inflating a dockers and railwaymen. 32 June, the jury found Joe guilty of murder and sentenced him to death. However, the court stayed the execution for a new trial could be held.

The IWW in the US really got under way. Throughout the affair Joe had defended his defense, insisting that the matter was a personal one and the IWW's much needed money should not be wasted.

Finally he rested and the massive defense campaign, which was to stay the guns of execution for more than a year. The result was a victory. Joe was acquitted in June. But the press and the police had condensed the story of the Joe Hill's trial and in order to get to the right room.

The attitude was that he was a member of the job and a troublemaker and even if he hadn't committed the crime, American society was better off with him.

The case against Joe Hill stood on the defense of the two men who entered Montgomery's room. The judge identified them as being one of these two men.

The Ford strike this year—management threatened to run down Dagenham and stop European investment in a bid to break the strike

by Sabby Sagall

IT HAS BEEN predicted that in 13 years' time the third biggest industrial empire, the United States and Russia will not be European but American industry in Europe.

One of the most striking features of the last 10 years has been the rise of the giant international corporations with factories and offices in several countries. These giants are a threat to workers employed in the different countries. The houses of these giant corporations all admit in their annual reports that they have factories and offices in several countries.

Since the time of the 1969 Ford strike in Britain, the management threatened to run down Dagenham and stop European investment in a bid to break the strike. It is the same story in Belgium and with the Ford plants there.

The Ford strike in Belgium, in the Liege region of the country, has been described by some workers as a "revolutionary struggle." The battle was an all-out battle by the Ford workers to stop the closure of the factory. The Ford workers have succeeded in their battle.

Strike weakened

In the recent General strike this year, the management moved machinery to Dagenham to maintain the same level of production. Migrants from Gatchina to get their coal short of coal. Both strikes were a battle to break the strike.

The result was a weakening of the General strike. In Britain, the strikers at 200 to 300 factories were forced to accept a new contract in a matter of weeks.

The management of the Ford strike in Europe has weakened the strike by threatening to close down the factory.

IBM produces in 14 different countries around the world. Its products are manufactured in many countries. The Ford workers are involved in the production of computers.

Strategy needed

For an employer to play "take your profits from your workers," he must be able to sell his commodities cheaply and to his advantage. The reason why I cannot give you higher wages is because there are some basic points in cost and production which I cannot increase.

Firstly, the prevention of stoppage of consumption in any part of the world in the period before war demands.

Secondly, preventing the company from being able to sell their commodities in one country to another, as to keep production going in the event of a strike.

Thirdly, preventing the company from increasing its sales in one country so as to defeat workers in another.

Routes, Ford and Vauxhall are taking a giant cut of national boundaries

By the time this book is published, the giant international corporations will have taken steps to increase their influence in other countries.

The Ford strike in Belgium has weakened the Ford strike in Britain because of the General strike and the Ford workers' victory.

Planned struggles

The fight against the multinational firm will increasingly have to take the form of internationally planned struggles, with trade unions and communist parties. It is the only way to break the power of the multinational firm.

It will only be possible for workers to stop the multinational firms if they organize internationally and demand a standard of living for their workers. Workers in all countries will have to fight for improvements in wages and working conditions.

The demand for control over the multinational firms will be a continuing battle. The multinational firms will try to stop the demand for control over the lives and conditions of workers.
Trinidad fights the grip of oil and sugar bosses

by Martin Tomkinson

REVOLT in Trinidad, Haiti and Costa Rica last week. The Americans were so alarmed that they ordered three frigates into the area, backed up by three British frigates.

The attack on the American-owned and mis-governed are rapidly drawing to a close.

Trinidad is the last bastion of the West Indian islands with a population of over one million. The majority of the people are Negroes and about 36 per cent are European.

Most of the rest are of mixed race. There are only a few thousand Europeans on the island.

The Negroes are descendants of slaves from Africa or from other parts of the West Indies. This is a fact of great importance for the future and society of the whole of the West Indies.

The most disastrous effect of the American presence is that it is creating a split in the island's culture, between those who have been influenced by the two major racial groups.

This can be seen in Guayana and the other Caribbean islands as well, but it is edging up to the big business interests on the island, making it more important.

It is important to stress that in Trinidad there was a complete absence of Negro and Indian students who were against their common oppressor — imperialism.

Flagrantly robbed

Although Trinidad is the only West Indian island to have a balance of payments surplus, all Trinidadians are most flagrantly robbed and exploited of their country's natural wealth. Economically, Trinidad means oil, sugar and oil and sugar and oil and sugar.

Taxco owns 80 per cent of the island's oil production and last year earned $53,500,000. Yale and Lafayette owns 50 per cent of the sugar production and last year earned a trading profit of $1.9m. Nearly all of it traded on the New York Stock Exchange, Switzerland, Britain and America. Economically, the island is a shambles, but with its economy held by foreign big business interests, there was a struggle.

These big business interests were the stranglehold of a offshore bank.

The gap between the rich, who were able to create the impression that a small section of society was attempting to overthrow the majority, was a large one.

In the political field, the conflict is one led by black people and white people on the island. That is the real meaning of 'black power' in this context.

Unemployment is running at over 15 per cent of the labour force and both Britain and America have cut back drastically on their immigration quotas. Britain allowed 10,000 in 1969, 1,000 in 1970 and now 0 in 1971.

And if British were to join the Commonwealth Market, Trinidad and Tobago, the sugar industry, which has dominated the economy of Trinidad for over a century and a half, would be destroyed. The government has repeatedly said that it would be a disaster.

After last week's uprising, Eric Williams, Trinidad's Prime Minister, must have been relieved to the Jews of history because he has probably done more than any other Trinidadian to re-establish a pride in the black culture. Through books like Capitalism and Socialism, he has given the Negroes of this country a sense of identity.

People's National Movement which with 40 per cent of the seats has remained there ever since.

As long as the US lives the Americans out of their black political and economic problems... and takes some radical measures like

Cottons Column

A common cause of acne possibilities and other skin problems is the impact of sunlight on the skin. The sun's rays can damage the skin and cause it to become dry, flaky and even develop wrinkles.

To combat this problem, several companies produce cottons and lotions to help protect the skin from the harmful effects of sunlight. These products typically contain ingredients like sunscreen, antioxidants, and vitamins to provide additional protection.

Shops such as Boots and Boots own 10 per cent of the market. In 1967, Boots' profit was £3,150,000.

ceiling period for two reasons.

One method of raising the level of wages is to introduce a system of wage controls. This can be achieved through a variety of measures, such as setting maximum wage increases or linking wages to productivity gains.

The other useful method of increasing wages is to demand a higher living standard. This can be achieved through a campaign to raise public awareness of the issues and to put pressure on the government to address the problem.

In conclusion, the need for wage increases is evident and urgent. The government should take action to ensure that workers receive a fair share of the economic gains. This can be achieved through a combination of wage controls and increased living standards.

Fleet St. lock-out threat as printers reject prod deals

by Ross Pritchard (NGA)

WHILE VIC FEATHER is setting down with the Newspaper Publishers Association in a High Court action, the Fleet Street printing community is bracing itself for another lock-out in the run-up to the Christmas season.

The National Graphical Association members at the Mirror are preparing for a lock-out, claiming that the offer presented to them is far below the levels that have been accepted by other print workers.

The Federal Government Association has tabled a new offer, which it claims is an improvement on the previous one, but the Mirror printing community has rejected it.

The threat of a lock-out has arisen because the Mirror printing community has not accepted the previous offer, which was made by the printing community and accepted by the Federal Government Association.

The Mirror printing community is demanding a higher increase, which it claims is necessary to compensate for the rising cost of living.

The printing community has stated that it will not accept any offer that is below the levels that have been accepted by other print workers.

Reduced staff

Both the publishers of the two main newspapers, the Mirror and the Evening Standard, are on record as being in favour of productivity improvements and higher wages.

But it is not clear whether these two newspapers will be affected by the lock-out.

The Mirror management has stated that it will not accept any offer that is below the levels that have been accepted by other print workers.
