Against Opposition and Bureaucracy in the Workers Communist Party of America

A STATEMENT BY AMERICAN COMMUNISTS BY JAMES P. CANNON, MARTIN ABEBER AND MIKE SCHACHMAN

The Semi-Monthly Organ of the Opposition Group in the Workers Communist Party of America.

"It is necessary that every member of the Party should study closely and with the greatest objectivity, the study of the differences of opinion and then the development of the struggles within the Party. Failure to do so may either be the cause of the development of both sides, or even that the work of the Party is diminished" - Lenin

On October 27 the enlarged meeting of the Central Executive Committee was called by the Party for the purpose of discussing the relations of the Party with the Political Committee of the Constitution, which is presided over by Stalin. The meeting was opened by a lengthy speech of the Central Executive Committee member, which was followed by a discussion of the constitutional question upon which it is not possible for us to make any statements at present. After a brief discussion the meeting adjourned at the request of the Central Executive Committee member.

The current issue of the Revolution is the only one which has ever been published in the United States. The Revolution is published by the American Communist Party, which is the only party in the United States with a membership of over 50,000.

Trotsky and Rakovsky. Seriously, III

The most important event in the political life of the United States in recent years has been the election of a new President, Harry S. Truman. The election has been marked by a sharp division in the political parties, with the Democratic Party under the leadership of the President, and the Republican Party under the leadership of Senator Bobby Kennedy. The election has also been marked by a sharp division in the working class, with the labor movement under the leadership of the President, and the management movement under the leadership of Senator Bobby Kennedy.

Trade Union Questions

The past year has witnessed a sharp rise in the activity of the party and the left wing in the trade unions. The development of the class struggle and the growth of our party has created new conditions and new problems. Our party and the trade unions must respond to these new conditions.

What are the main issues involved in the conflict between the party and the trade unions? How should we respond to these issues?

1. The struggle against the leadership of the British Communist Party, which has been fostering a split in the trade unions.

2. The struggle for control over the trade unions, which are a key component of the working class movement.

3. The struggle for democratic rights and freedom of speech within the trade unions.

4. The struggle against the influence of the British government and its policies on the trade unions.

5. The struggle for the right to strike and the protection of workers' rights.

The British Communist Party has attempted to divide the trade unions and to prevent them from uniting with the rest of the working class. This has led to a crisis in the trade unions and a decline in their influence.

We must work to overcome these difficulties and to build a strong and united trade union movement. We must work to unite the trade unions with the rest of the working class and to build a powerful and united trade union movement.

Sincerely yours,

James P. Cannon

The Militant

The Militant, a newspaper of the Communist Party of Great Britain, has published an article discussing the issue of the expulsion of the British Communist Party. The article provides an overview of the events leading up to the expulsion and the consequences of the decision. The article also discusses the implications of the expulsion for the future of the British Communist Party and its role in the working class movement.

We do not believe that the expulsion was necessary or justified. We believe that the party should have worked to resolve the differences within the party and to rebuild its strength. We also believe that the party should have worked to unite with other left-wing groups and to build a powerful and united trade union movement.

Sincerely yours,

James P. Cannon

which transparent and is even being explained in one sentence. The document explains that it is possible to build up Socialism in so-called "developed" states, but that the country where the capital would be built on is the United States. The document also mentions the need for a stronger labor movement in the United States, and how it is important to educate workers about the benefits of Socialism. Overall, the document emphasizes the importance of building a strong labor movement and educating workers about the benefits of Socialism in order to achieve a successful transition to Socialism.
The Fortress of the World Revolution

ELEVEN years have gone by since the Russian workers, both the hammer of evolution in their hands and the banner of the World Social Democratic Party in its work, fought against the workers of the world in the South Russian Revolution. The history of the struggle of the workers of this country has been, in essence, a history of the efforts of the imperialists to forge a chain that the workers, in the petit bourgeois revolutions of the “socialist” parties, made it appease with a kind of servility to the demands of the workers. This was the leader of the Communist International which came out of the revolution brought about by social measures in the East. Eleven years of the dictatorship of the proletarian revolution has confirmed everything that Lenin taught about the international significance of the revolution and the absolute bonds between it and the world proletariat.

Soviet Russia is the fortress of the World Revolution. It stands not only in the military toil and sacrifice of the workers of the world, but also the political leadership of the working class, which, with the help of the world, will be victorious in its struggle for the revolution.

The victory of the Russian proletariat grew out of the World War. The establishment of the dictatorship of the proletariat in Russia and the organization of the Communist International—two of the great events in the history of the world revolutionary movement of the proletariat—were made possible by the war.

The solidarity of the workers and the “socialist” blocs of workers formed the basis for the victory of the Russian Revolution, and we are resolved to destroy the world revolution through them.

The path to the workers’ world revolution is the path of the workers themselves, and this path is the path to the victory of the International.

Slogans for Today

A MATCH to the Daily Worker (11-10-1919) reports that the leading section of the Petrograd of Officers (October 31), has issued the following “slogans” against the autonomy of the Bolshevik revolution in which it is the official slogan of the National Revolutionary front.

“Against the Bureaucrats!”

“Less than a year ago, the 16th Congress of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union, the Congress of this international organization, was held. It established a clear, simple, and just standard for the revolutionary workers of the world to follow.

The slogans adopted were:

1. “Against the bureaucracy!”
2. “Against the concealment of the leaders of the world revolution!”
3. “Against the centralization of power!”
4. “Against the call for world revolution at the 16th Congress!”
