Banking Crisis: Attempt to Defend Gold Standard Proved to Be Costly

Small Banks Fail

It is the small banks, and not the big banks, which have been the chief sufferers in the banking crisis which has been raging in the United States for several months. The number of banks which have failed or been closed is now over 800, and the total amount involved is over $100,000,000. The failure of small banks is due to the fact that they are not well capitalized, and that they have not had the opportunity to accumulate reserves in order to meet the demands of their customers. The large banks, on the other hand, have been able to keep their reserves up to the required level, and have therefore been able to continue to operate.

Growing Revolt against National Government Marks British Scene

VOTE COMMUNIST IN THE ELECTIONS!

Support the Candidates of the C.P.U.S.A.

Banking Crisis

Although the banking crisis has been in progress for several months, it has not yet reached its climax. The situation is still very precarious, and there is much fear that it may get worse before it gets better. The collapse of the small banks has created a great many problems, and there is much uncertainty as to what will happen next. It is hoped that the government will be able to take some steps to prevent a further collapse of the banks, and to keep the money market from getting too tight. Otherwise, there is a good chance that the crisis will continue for some time to come.

TUNES NECESSARY

Funds Needed Immediately

The government has already taken some steps to help the banks, but these have not been sufficient to prevent a further collapse. The government will have to take much more action if it is to prevent a wholesale collapse of the banks. The government will have to provide more money, and it will have to do so in a hurry. If the government does not act soon, there is a good chance that the banking crisis will get much worse.
ON THE WORKERS’ FRONT

Lessons from the Furriers’ Fight for the Coming Dressmakers’ Struggle

The situation created in recent years by the new methods of production in the furrier trade has added fuel to the growing discontent among workers of all levels. The workers have been hit by layoffs and reductions in their pay, and the conditions of work have deteriorated. The struggle of the furriers’ strike was an important step in their fight for better working conditions and a fair deal.

The Government Civil Service Applies Hooverism to the White Collar Labor

Hooverism, a policy of austerity and fiscal restraint, has been applied by the government to the civil service. This policy has led to cuts in salaries and benefits for government employees, as well as to a reduction in the size of the workforce. The government has argued that this is necessary to restore the economy and to reduce the national debt. However, this policy has been criticized by many workers and labor organizations, who argue that it is not only unfair but also ineffective in stimulating economic growth.

Stalinists Again Oust Left Opposition at Chicago Unemployment Conference

The conference was dominated by the Stalinist faction, which had the support of the working class. However, the Left Opposition was able to make gains, and its ideas were presented to a wider audience. The conference was a significant event in the history of the workers’ movement, and it helped to spread the ideas of the Left Opposition.

A Few “Pages from Party History”

For a few years now, Leonov has been a prominent figure in the party, and his speeches and writings have been widely discussed. However, his role in the party has been controversial, and his views have often been at odds with those of other prominent party leaders. In this essay, Leonov reflects on his experiences in the party and on the challenges that he has faced.

FOR YOUR LIBRARY

Books by Leon Trotsky

The Strategy of the World Revolution

The Draft Program of the Communist International

The Spanish Revolution

The Civil War in Russia

Problems of the Development of Capitalism in Russia

Youth Will Issue “Young Spartacus” as Organ

In the 1920s, Leon Trotsky began publishing a series of books and articles that were intended to educate and inspire the working class. These works were published by the Young Spartacus, a publication of the Communist International.

Youth will issue "Young Spartacus" as Organ

The "Young Spartacus" was a publication of the Young Communist League, which was a youth organization of the Communist International. The publication was intended to educate and inspire young people to join the fight for a socialist future.

Youth in the United States

The Young Communist League in the United States was an important organization in the struggle for social democracy in the country. It was active in organizing workers, students, and other youth to support the fight for social justice.

Youth and the Workers’ Struggle

The Young Communist League was actively involved in the workers’ struggle in the United States. It supported strikes and other forms of direct action by workers to improve their conditions.

Youth and the Fight for Socialism

The Young Communist League was committed to fighting for a socialist future, and it worked to educate young people about the principles of socialism and the need for workers’ control of the means of production.

Youth and the Fight for Democracy

The Young Communist League was also involved in the fight for democracy in the United States. It supported civil liberties and opposed the stifling of free speech and other forms of political expression.

Youth and the Fight for Equality

The Young Communist League was committed to fighting for equal rights for all people, regardless of race, gender, or sexuality. It worked to educate young people about the need for social justice and to fight against discrimination.

Youth and the Fight for Peace

The Young Communist League was committed to fighting for peace and to promoting international cooperation. It worked to educate young people about the need for peace and to fight against war and violence.
SILENCE IN THE RANKS OF THE PARTY

The N.T.W.U. at Work in Boston

After a long period of paralysis the N.T.W.U. had awakened to the fact that something must be done. And while this is not the first time that the issue has come up, it is a bigger issue than ever before. The workers are now demanding that all workers be included in the Union.

When the rank-and-file workers went on strike last week, they were met with a barrage of criticism. The bosses tried to break the workers' spirit by offering higher wages and better working conditions. But the workers were not swayed by these offers. They knew that the only way to win was through a strong union.

The workers' struggle is not just for their own benefits. It is a struggle for the rights of all workers. The workers' union is a force for change. It is demanding that the bosses be held accountable for their actions. The workers are not going to be pushed around by the bosses.

The workers' victory is a victory for all workers. The workers' union is showing that it is possible to organize and to win. And the workers are determined to keep on fighting until all workers are treated fairly and equitably.
EDITORIAL NOTES

LAYING THE FOUNDATIONS

The question of Workers' Control of Production is such an important one, that we must begin by stating the facts. As a principle, it is the basis of all future socialist development. The first step in the process of establishing socialism is to place the means of production in the hands of the working class. This involves the transfer of ownership from the capitalists to the workers. It is only when the workers control the means of production that they can begin to create a society in which the interests of the working class are placed above those of the ruling class.

In the capitalist system, the owners of the means of production dictate the terms of labor and the conditions of work. The workers have no say in the decisions that affect their lives. This leads to exploitation, where the owners of the means of production extract surplus value from the workers. The workers are forced to sell their labor power to the capitalists in order to survive, and the capitalists are able to exploit them.

Workers' Control of Production involves the workers taking control of the factories and workplaces, and making decisions about how the work is carried out. This includes decisions about the work itself, as well as decisions about the conditions under which the work is performed. It also includes decisions about the distribution of the wealth generated by the work.

Workers' Control of Production is a key element in the transition to socialism. It is a necessary step in the process of establishing a society in which the interests of the working class are placed above those of the ruling class. It is only when the workers control the means of production that they can begin to create a society in which the interests of the working class are placed above those of the ruling class.

The question of Workers' Control of Production is such an important one, that we must begin by stating the facts. As a principle, it is the basis of all future socialist development. The first step in the process of establishing socialism is to place the means of production in the hands of the working class. This involves the transfer of ownership from the capitalists to the workers. It is only when the workers control the means of production that they can begin to create a society in which the interests of the working class are placed above those of the ruling class.

In the capitalist system, the owners of the means of production dictate the terms of labor and the conditions of work. The workers have no say in the decisions that affect their lives. This leads to exploitation, where the owners of the means of production extract surplus value from the workers. The workers are forced to sell their labor power to the capitalists in order to survive, and the capitalists are able to exploit them.

Workers' Control of Production involves the workers taking control of the factories and workplaces, and making decisions about how the work is carried out. This includes decisions about the work itself, as well as decisions about the conditions under which the work is performed. It also includes decisions about the distribution of the wealth generated by the work.

Workers' Control of Production is a key element in the transition to socialism. It is a necessary step in the process of establishing a society in which the interests of the working class are placed above those of the ruling class. It is only when the workers control the means of production that they can begin to create a society in which the interests of the working class are placed above those of the ruling class.