Strike Ends in Philadelphia S.K.F. Works

The Philadelphia Cord wife of the SKF Anti-Picketing Board was released last month after a four-month strike against the company. The workers, who have been on strike for nearly two years, were cheered by the news that their leader was free. The strike was led by the United Auto Workers (UAW), who had been on strike for nearly two years. The strike began in March 1983 and continued until March 1984.

The Cord wife, whose name was not released, had been arrested in December 1983 for violating a court order that prohibited her from striking. She was charged with contempt of court and was held in jail for 90 days. After her release, she was immediately re-arrested on charges of violating the court order.

The Cord wife had been a leader of the UAW Local 136, which represents workers at the SKF plant in Philadelphia. She had been involved in a number of labor disputes over the years, including a strike at the SKF plant in 1977. She had also been a member of the International Women's League for Human Rights, which was active in supporting the Cord wife.

The Cord wife's release was met with rejoicing by the workers at the SKF plant, who said it was a victory for their union. They said they would continue to fight for better wages and working conditions.

The Cord wife was not the only labor leader in Philadelphia to be arrested in recent months. Several other leaders of the UAW Local 136 have been arrested on charges of contempt of court for violating a court order that prohibits them from striking.

The Cord wife's release was seen as a positive sign for the workers at the SKF plant and for the labor movement as a whole. It was a reminder that the fight for workers' rights was not over.

The Cord wife had been a strong leader for the workers at the SKF plant, and her release was a victory for the labor movement. The workers at the SKF plant were determined to continue their fight for better conditions and wages, and they were confident that they would succeed.

GERMAN FASCISM UNMASKED

Movement Toward Unity Against Fascism Grows

Central theme of the past few years is the growing anti-fascist movement in Europe. The fascists have been defeated on the battlefields, but they remain a potent force in many countries. The fascists have been working hard to undermine the anti-fascist movement. They use propaganda and subversion to divide the working class and to create a climate of fear.

Defeated on the battlefields, the fascists have turned to the political arena. They use the courts and the police to suppress opposition. They use propaganda to spread lies and misinformation. They use terror to strike fear into the hearts of the working class.

The fascists have also been working to undermine the democratic institutions of the West. They are trying to undermine the rule of law and the independence of the judiciary. They are trying to undermine the freedoms of the press and of assembly.

The fascists have also been working to undermine the international alliances of the West. They are trying to isolate the West and to weaken its resolve to defend democracy.
