Intimidation in Buffalo

By John A. Wright

On this scale of the American labor movement's death, it is necessary to redress the truck. It is necessary to emphasize ILLUSTRATION on the action line: LADIES' ENDS.

This is the heart of Marchant, a neat, modest woman, 19 years old, "an honest girl, an honest child..." She was working at a factory in Buffalo, New York, when she was arrested by the police for striking. The strike was in support of the United Textile Workers of America, and Marchant was one of the leaders of the strike. She was sentenced to 20 years in prison.

Marchant's case is the latest in a series of attacks on labor unions in the United States. The government has been using its power to try to break the unions and prevent workers from organizing. This is a direct violation of the rights of workers and a threat to the future of the labor movement.

The only way to stop this attack on the labor movement is to fight back. We need to support Marchant and all the other workers who are fighting for their rights. We need to stand up to the government and demand that they stop their attacks on the labor movement.

We need to build a strong movement to support Marchant and all the other workers who are fighting for their rights. We need to organize a national mobilization to fight back against the government's attacks on the labor movement. We need to demand that the government stop its attacks on the labor movement and that it respect the rights of all workers.

Only by building a strong movement can we hope to defeat the government's attacks on the labor movement. We need to organize a national mobilization to fight back against the government's attacks on the labor movement. We need to demand that the government stop its attacks on the labor movement and that it respect the rights of all workers.
