Oil Imperialists Aim at Syria’s Independence

By Fred Halliday

The little country of Syria with its three and a half million population has become the new object of attack by the faction of the imperialist capitalists. Last week, Russian and British warships, under the leadership of British warships under the leadership of the English Empire, entered the port of Haifa and began to bomb Iraqi installations. This action was aimed to force the Russian and British governments to bow to the desires of the fascist imperialist powers.

Syria has long been a target of the imperialists. The French and British have been known to support the Syrian independence movement. However, this time the attack is more aggressive.

"Syria is a small country but it is a source of inspiration to the people of the world. The attack on Syria is a clear violation of the principles of international law. The imperialists are trying to undermine the independence of Syria and to spread their influence in the region. Syria is the last stronghold of the Arab nations," said a Syrian official.

The Syrian government has condemned the attack and called for international support. The Syrian people are determined to defend their independence and resist the imperialist aggressions.

Docker's Fight Taft-Hartley Injunction With Slowdown

"There has been a slowdown in the implementation of the Taft-Hartley Injunction. The dockers are determined to fight against this slowdown. We will continue to take action until the injunction is lifted," said a dock worker.

The dockers have been on strike for several days, demanding the lifting of the injunction. The Taft-Hartley Act of 1947, which was passed by the US Congress, among other things, prohibited the formation of labor unions by dockers and other workers. The dockers are determined to fight against this act.

The Real Counter-Revolutionaries in Hungary

One of Stalin's chief weapons against his working-class opponents was his stab in the back - military invasion, especially the false linking of devoted fighters with the multimillion-dollar arms of the international capitalist states. The new hamlet of the Krasnograd region, running a counterattack on a field, was a clear cut-and-dry case. And the Komsomol hired by Stalin was known to be a group of traitors. The Stalinist forces were forced to use their weapons against their own people, in order to destroy the Komsomol's independent political leadership. It was known that in many places throughout the region, the Komsomol was being used by the authorities to keep the population in line. The Stalinist forces were in the process of committing mass murder, with the backing of their own people. The Komsomol was being used to maintain order and to keep the population in line.

In Stalin's Footsteps

In the midst of the Komsomol's activities, a small group of independent fighters was set up. This group was known as the Komsomolnik. The Komsomolniks were known for their independent political leadership and their resistance to the Stalinist forces. They were committed to the idea of a worker-controlled society and were determined to fight against the Stalinist forces. They were determined to fight for the rights of the working class and to establish a new society based on the principle of equality and freedom. The Komsomolniks were in the process of organizing a new resistance movement, and they were determined to fight against the Stalinist forces and to establish a new society based on the principle of equality and freedom.

Polish Workers Push Ahead

By Harvey Ring

The Polish Communist Party's recent policy statement, setting new goals of increased industrial growth and greater national self-sufficiency, is the outcome of the party's careful assessment of the country's economic situation and its determination to meet the aspirations of its workers.

The policy statement calls for a further intensification of the socialist construction process, with particular emphasis on increasing the output of heavy industry and building new industries.

The party highlighted the need for the development of new industries in the country. It also called for the expansion of existing industries and the modernization of production methods. This would involve the introduction of new technologies and the improvement of the quality of the products.

The statement also emphasized the importance of increasing the supply of machinery and equipment to the industrial sector. This would enable the country to reduce its dependence on imported goods and increase its self-sufficiency.

The party's policy statement is a clear indication of its commitment to the socialist construction process and its determination to meet the aspirations of its workers. It shows that the party is, indeed, a party of the workers and for the workers.
THE NEGRO STRUGGLE

By Jean Blake

David J. McDonald: The Bureaucratic Mind

David J. McDonald, president of the United States Industrial Workers of the World, recently was caught in a stick-up gang behind bars. In his first public confession of a crime, he was overheard to say that his associates had told him, "We can't trust the cops. If we're charged, we're dead."

The Negro's struggle for freedom, as the Negro himself has said, is a struggle for recognition—of the Negro as a man, of the Negro as a citizen, of the Negro as a human being. And in this struggle, the Negro has been forced to face the facts of life. The facts of life are that the Negro is a human being, that he is a citizen of the United States, and that he has a right to be treated as such.

But the facts of life are not enough. The Negro must also be able to think. He must be able to think for himself, and he must be able to think clearly. And in order to do this, he must be able to read. He must be able to read so that he can understand the books that are written for him, and he must be able to understand the books that are written for him so that he can write them himself.

The Negro's struggle for freedom is a struggle for education. It is a struggle for the right to read, and it is a struggle for the right to think. And in order to win this struggle, the Negro must be able to read, and he must be able to think.
