A "Ripe Fruit" For the Kremlin?
By Joseph Hansen

When Fidel Castro seized power in Cuba, the American government was taken by surprise. For a while it was believed that the American people would not accept a new government in Cuba and would turn against the old régime. But when Fidel Castro's forces seized power on May 19, 1959, the American government immediately realized that it had to make a decision. The decision was whether to support or oppose the new régime in Cuba.

In November, 1959, the United States government recognized the new régime in Cuba and opened diplomatic relations with it. This was a significant step towards normalization of relations between the two countries. However, the United States government continued to impose economic sanctions against Cuba and to support counter-revolutionary groups in the country.

The United States government's policies towards Cuba have been one of the most controversial issues in recent years. The government has been accused of trying to overthrow the Castro régime by supporting counter-revolutionary groups and by imposing economic sanctions against the country. However, the government has also been accused of trying to improve relations with Cuba and of supporting peaceful protests against the régime.

There is no easy answer to the question of how to deal with Cuba. The United States government has to balance its interests in the region with its commitment to human rights and democracy. It has to consider the long-term interests of the United States and the region, as well as the short-term interests of the people of Cuba.

China Versus India—Which Will Prevail?
By William F. Worden

The Cold War is a contest between two nuclear superpowers, China and India. The Cold War is a struggle for power and influence in the world, and it is a struggle for survival. The United States and China are the two main players in the Cold War, and India is a key player in the conflict.

China and India are very different countries, both in terms of their history and their ideology. China is a Communist country, and India is a democratic country. China is a large country, and India is a large country. China is a rich country, and India is a poor country. China is a powerful country, and India is a weak country.

Despite these differences, China and India have a lot in common. Both countries are trying to achieve their goals through peaceful means, and both countries are trying to achieve their goals through economic development. Both countries are trying to achieve their goals through education, and both countries are trying to achieve their goals through culture.

The United States government has to take a position in the conflict between China and India. It has to decide whether to support China or to support India. The government has to consider the interests of the United States in the region, as well as the interests of China and India.

Who Wrecked the Summit?

In a searching speech to the Senate June 30 Senator J. W. Fulbright of Arkansas, chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, declared that the parenthesis which the Kennedy Administration around the U-2 spy-flights costed the life of a child as a result of a senseless action by the government. He pointed out that the nation’s business was being done in the name of civil liberties.

The Militant, together with many governments and peoples the world over, has consistently opposed the further worsening of the cold war by what it denounces as unscrupulous tactics on the part of the United States and imperialist forces. It has concluded that the nation’s business is being done in the name of civil liberties.

The Militant’s editorial “The Worker and the Free Speech” presented a comprehensive analysis of the situation, stating that the nation’s business is being done in the name of civil liberties.

Invasion of a suitcase bolt opening the New York Times office in the summer of 1956. Who knew? It just so happened that the protesters were not the usual suspects. The Times was taken by storm by the majority of whom, with brassy insensitive resolve, would have tried to stop the invasion if the Times could have made it. The majority of the protesters must have been very tickled about it.

The hospitals which had opened up to the press in the summer of 1956, when it will come is very difficult to forecast.
