Attorney General Seeks Indictment Of Union Leaders

Attorney General Frank Murphy announced to the press on Wednesday — July 16—that he had ordered the United States District Attorney for the Southern District of New York to bring Federal criminal investigations against the members of the Workers of the World for alleged violations of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act.

The charges came in response to reports that the W.O.T.W. has been involved in price fixing, under-cutting and other forms of anti-competitive behavior. This is the first time that the Federal government has taken such action against a national labor union.

The Attorney General said that his investigation is the result of a series of meetings with labor leaders who have been cooperating with his office. The meetings began in March, when several key members of the W.O.T.W. were brought in for questioning.

Murphy said that the W.O.T.W. has been accused of engaging in a series of illegal activities, including price fixing, under-cutting and other forms of anti-competitive behavior. He also accused the union of engaging in criminal activity, such as racketeering and fraud.

Anti- Fascists Arrested at New Haven Meeting

Despite Police Persuasion S.W.P. Branch Continues Fight Against Coughlin Fascism

By B. J. WIDICK

The C.I.O. officers were not present when the S.W.P. branch of the Connecticut state federation met in New Haven Saturday night. The branch, however, continued its fight against the Coughlinite fascists.

The branch called a meeting in a New Haven labor room last Thursday evening to discuss the Coughlinite movement and the S.W.P. branch's campaign to fight against Coughlinism. The branch's officers were not present at the meeting, but the branch's members continued their fight against Coughlinism through the distribution of pamphlets and literature to the workers.

The branch's officers were unable to attend the meeting due to various other activities with which they were involved. However, the branch's members' determination to fight against Coughlinism remained strong.

The branch's campaign to fight against Coughlinism is continuing, with meetings and literature distribution being held in various labor rooms throughout the state.

The branch's continued activism in response to the Coughlinite movement demonstrates the S.W.P.'s commitment to fighting against fascism and the Coughlinist threat.

Revolutionary Socialists, and their party, the Socialist Workers Party in Connecticut, have consistently advocated for the establishment of a workers' state, a government by and for the workers. This is the only solution to the crises that the British labor movement is facing. The British labor movement is facing a crisis of capitalism, and only a workers' state can provide the necessary conditions for the workers to control their own destiny and achieve genuine freedom.

A workers' state would ensure that the working class has the power to make decisions about their lives, work, and society. It would eliminate exploitation, poverty, and oppression, allowing workers to live in conditions of true equality and freedom.

The British labor movement needs to learn from the experiences of the Russian Revolution in 1917, which demonstrated the power of workers to overthrow capitalism and establish a workers' state. A workers' state in Britain would be a significant step towards a world without oppression and exploitation.

The struggle for a workers' state is not just a matter of theoretical discussion. It is a fight for the future of humanity, for the freedom and well-being of all workers. The revolutionary socialists and the Socialist Workers Party in Connecticut are committed to fighting for this revolutionary future, for a world where workers' control is the only possible form of government.

One Project That Will Be Well Financed!

By Max Shachman

Two objectives have been realized in the congress of the American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations (AFL-CIO) held in Cleveland recently. The first was the redrafting of the American Federation of Labor's 'socialalist' union campaign. The second was the attempt to reconcile the conflict between the two largest labor federations of the United States, the AFL and the Congress of Industrial Organizations (CIO). The projects were both accomplished, although the latter was only partially successful. The former was achieved in a more decisive manner.

In the Cleveland Congress, the AFL-CIO adopted a new resolution, the "1948 Program." This resolution was a significant step toward the realization of the "socialist" union campaign of the AFL. It provided for the establishment of a "socialist" union in the United States, with the objective of organizing the working class into a single, unified labor movement. The resolution was supported by a majority of delegates to the congress, and it was expected to be a major factor in the development of the "socialist" union movement in the United States.

However, the resolution was not without its problems. The AFL-CIO, which has traditionally been opposed to the "socialist" union movement, was not entirely satisfied with the resolution. Some AFL delegates expressed reservations about the resolution, and there were fears that it would lead to the split of the AFL and the CIO. Nevertheless, the resolution was adopted, and it was hoped that it would be a step toward the realization of the "socialist" union movement in the United States.

In the meantime, the AFL-CIO was working to implement the resolution. The federation was establishing new unions and expanding existing ones, with the objective of organizing the working class into a single, unified labor movement. The federation was also working to develop a new labor movement, which it hoped would be able to compete with the AFL and the CIO.

The "socialist" union movement was a complex and controversial issue, and it was not easy to achieve. The federation had to overcome many obstacles, including the opposition of the AFL and the CIO, and the lack of funds and resources. However, the federation was determined to succeed, and it was confident that it could achieve its objectives.

In conclusion, the resolution adopted by the AFL-CIO in Cleveland was a significant step toward the realization of the "socialist" union movement in the United States. The federation was determined to overcome the obstacles, and it was confident that it could achieve its objectives. The federation was working hard to implement the resolution, and it was hopeful that it could succeed.
