UNIT BUT UNFIT TO BENEFIT LABOR
AN EDITORIAL

The big push for some form of trade union movement: loud are the voices raised for unity in Atlantic City and New York this week at the CIO and AFL conventions. But most of us, for reasons of our own, will think twice before allying ourselves with the Federation. For those who are unwilling or unable to join the labor movement, the question of whether or not to support an individual worker or a union is ultimately a personal decision. The big push for some form of trade union movement: loud are the voices raised for unity in Atlantic City and New York this week at the CIO and AFL conventions. But most of us, for reasons of our own, will think twice before allying ourselves with the Federation. For those who are unwilling or unable to join the labor movement, the question of whether or not to support an individual worker or a union is ultimately a personal decision.

A FUNDAMENTAL QUESTION

Every serious trade unionist must ask himself this fundamental question: What kind of union will be of most benefit to industry and to labor itself? And how can we organize it?

The labor movement can only be a success if the business world is convinced that it makes good. If the labor movement is to be successful in its aim of better wages and hours, the workers must be convinced that the labor movement will make good also for their families. This is the first task of any labor movement. The business world is always going to be opposed to labor, always to be to the advantage of the workers.

In an effort to settle the strike, the management offered to settle the dispute by a 25-cent raise for each worker. The company fully understood that such a raise would be insufficient to meet the needs of the workers. The company had added the provision that the workers would have to agree to certain terms and conditions of employment. In effect, the company was saying, "We will raise your wages by 25 cents per hour. What do you say to that?"

The workers who were employed in the plant were employed in a plant that was producing automobiles. The company was willing to raise the wages by 25 cents per hour. But the workers said no. They wanted a raise of 50 cents per hour.

CRACKS CANNOT BE LEADED

But craft unionism crowd lead the labor movement. The CIO is strong in this respect. The AFL is not. Craft unionism has demonstrated its competence in the movement. It is the only union that can organize the mass of workers. It is the only union that can win the support of the workers. The CIO is not strong in this respect.

THEIR KIND OF "UNITY"

Not all craft unionists chide their corresponding unions and try to organize them into a better, more integrated labor movement. Some of the craft unionists recognize the need for unity. Others see it as a means to an end. In the words of one craft unionist, "We need unity to make a better, stronger labor movement."

The military transit program, unanimously accepted by the War Department, is gaining a good deal of support in the party branches. The program has so far been supported by a majority of the party workers. Numerous reports of the program's success have come in. There is a wide range of support for the program of action. The program of action is theoretically sound and it is being carried out in a successful manner. Write to us—say what’s going on in your part of the labor movement. Send us letters and articles on the following topics:

- What are the developments in your area?
- What are the policies of your shop?
- What are the strikers thinking and feeling?

In a recent issue we printed some news and a letter which showed that the story behind the strike was a strike. This was a letter from a worker who had been laid off. He wrote that he was due to go back to work the next day but that he was not sure if he would be able to. He felt that he was being treated unfairly by his employers. He wanted to know if there was anything he could do to improve his situation.

The United States Military Academy, West Point, is under direct control of the War Department. It is the only school in the United States where the state of New York pays for its construction and upkeep. The West Point community and its leaders, accordingly, are in the forefront of the struggle for the United States Army and the United States military, and the future of the United States Army and the United States military is inextricably linked to the future of the United States.

FRD Plans Same "50-50" Break for Labor in Coming War
As Workers Received in the Last Imperialist Conflict

By ARTHUR C. PEYER

The General Motors Hybrid's doors open on the auto workers, and the General Motors Corporation's doors are open to the workers. Workers in the United States have been working in a cooperative arrangement with the government and industry. The General Motors Corporation is one of the largest and most powerful organizations in the United States, and it has been working closely with the government to ensure that its workers are treated fairly.
