Jood-Working Equipment

The wood-working equipment is carrying more and more weight in Romania's machine-tool output. The equipment is being built in several machine-building enterprises, and especially at Roman which has a great specialized unit producing about 50 types and sizes of wood-working machines including 18-20 new kinds, annually. Until 1970 the Roman works is to double its output, by raising labour productivity, scientific organization of production, and investment work under way.

The Romanian wood-working equipment is diversified in keeping with the needs of the national economy now being covered 90 per cent from the domestic output. The Romanian units are building equipment from the simplest one - for mechanised log-cutting - to the complex wood-working plant in forest enterprises, rough conversion and timber polishing in the most modern furniture units of this country.

Here are some novelties of this year. The existing furniture panel polishing machines have got an addition: it is simpler but with greater efficiency. Another novelty is the parquetry polishing or floor finishing machine.

A 18 per cent rise in the output of equipment for forestry is envisaged for this year. The Romanian products in this branch are known in many countries.
