New York—"We will tell the workers in England the truth," said President William Taft in his speech at the British Mission to the United States. The mission was established to help coal miners in England and to promote trade between the two countries.

Chairman of the American Federation of Labor, Samuel Gompers, also spoke at the event. He emphasized the importance of solidarity among workers and urged the British labor movement to join forces with their American counterparts.

Following the speeches, the audience broke into small groups to discuss the issues and to plan strategies for supporting the miners in England.

James Redfern, president of the United Mine Workers of America, spoke in support of the miners. He called for a boycott of British coal and for the government to intervene to prevent further mining in England.

Working men of this country will find it very difficult to maintain their standard of living if they are forced to pay higher prices for coal. We must stand together to protect our interests and to ensure a fair deal for all workers.
Reason and Remedy for Farmers' Present Condition

In the issue of the American Appeal published on August 21, 1923, an article titled "Reason and Remedy for Farmers' Present Condition" discusses the challenges faced by farmers and suggests solutions. The article argues that the current agricultural crisis is not just the result of low prices but also of the concentration of economic power and the lack of a democratic voice in policy-making. It calls for a system that ensures fair prices and policies that empower farmers to make decisions that benefit them.

The article begins by acknowledging the widespread suffering among farmers due to low prices and long cold winters. It then goes on to elaborate on the root causes of the problem, highlighting the influence of large corporations and speculators who manipulate markets to their advantage. The author argues that farmers are not just victims of economic forces but are active participants in their own downfall, due to a lack of organization and collective action.

Non-Par Stock – A New Way of Looting American People

The article explains how this practice works and why it is harmful to the economy and the public welfare.
