Eugene V. Debs in 1895.

The following appeared in the Cincinnati Enquirer in 1895.

"The people own the country. The people own the land. The people own the natural resources of the country. The people own the government. The people own the power of the government. The people own the wealth of the country. The people own the purse of the government. The people own the income of the country. The people own the labor of the country. The people own the work of the country. The people own the government of the country. The people own the government of the city. The people own the government of the state. The people own the government of the nation. The people own the government of the world. The people own the government of the universe. The people own the government of the entire cosmos. The people own the government of the entire universe. The people own the government of the entire cosmos.

The people own the government of the entire universe."

Liberty Bell.

The following is a poem by a New York poet, John Greenleaf Whittier:

"Liberty Bell"

The people own the country. The people own the land. The people own the natural resources of the country. The people own the government. The people own the power of the government. The people own the wealth of the country. The people own the purse of the government. The people own the income of the country. The people own the labor of the country. The people own the work of the country. The people own the government of the country. The people own the government of the city. The people own the government of the state. The people own the government of the nation. The people own the government of the world. The people own the government of the universe. The people own the government of the entire cosmos. The people own the government of the entire universe."

APPEAL TO REASON, GIRARD, KAN.

WEEKLY, 6 CENTS PER YEAR.

A CRY FOR WORK.

The world's most precious and important possession is not its gold or silver, not its lands and forests, but its people. The greatest good we can do others is to help them find work and thus enable them to enjoy the fruits of their labor. It is a sad commentary on the state of the world that so many are now without employment.

In all parts of the country, men and women who have been accustomed to working are now idle. They are spending their days and nights in idleness and suffering from the effects of such a state of things.

The time has come when the government should step in and provide for the relief of the unemployed. It should establish work camps where the able-bodied can be employed in useful occupations, and where they can earn a living and support themselves.

The government should also provide for the education of the young and the training of the idle. It should establish schools and colleges where the youth can be taught the arts and sciences, and where they can acquire the knowledge and skills necessary for success in life.

There is no need to fear that such a program would be costly. The cost of maintaining these work camps and schools would be more than offset by the benefits that would accrue to the nation as a whole.

In conclusion, we appeal to reason. Let us work together to solve the problem of unemployment and thus build a better world for ourselves and our posterity.
American Notes.

The Englishman of the American Notes is the author of the Celebrated Rambles and Travels. His works are celebrated for their accuracy, and are read with the same interest as the works of Sir Walter Scott. The American Notes are a series of letters, written by the author, and published in the British Magazine, in which he describes his travels in America. The letters are written in a style which is both readable and instructive, and are full of interesting information about American life and customs.

To the Editor:

I am writing to express my opinion about the place of the American Notes in American literature. The American Notes are a valuable addition to the literature of America, and should be read by all who are interested in American history and culture.
