An Account of Stewardship

SOMETHING over a year ago I called for funds to send the Appeal to every editor in the United States and Canada. Some $300 were poured into this office to secure funds for the first year. That was in June, 1874. At that time the funds called for were to reach the press within two months. At first, however, the things went a little slower than expected. The appeal to editors was a success, notwithstanding the fact that the editors were not as numerous in the country as they are now. The editors who did reply gave me a lot of encouragement and many of them sent money, and without them I am not sure that the appeal could have succeeded. Some of the editors were very willing to help and did so, and for this I am very grateful. There were some who were not so willing, but I am not sure that they would be if they knew all the facts. The Appeal was not a success, but it was a success in the end.

The Appeal is a quarterly, and is published every three months. It is printed on good paper, and is issued in a handsome wrapper. It is mailed to the subscribers gratis, and the price of a single copy is $1.00. The Appeal is a good paper, and is read by a large number of people. It is not expensive, and is well worth the money. It is a wonderful thing to see the way the Appeal is growing. It is now in its fourth year, and is doing well.

The Appeal is published in a city near my home, and is sent to all parts of the country. It is read by a large number of people, and is a very good paper.
