A Remarkable

M A G r o w t h

Since the founding, the victories, the growth of American business has been marked by the national policies and the efforts of the state. The result is essentially national in character, and it is impossible to neglect the most important social and economic problems that have arisen. The territory is not composed of many localities and there is need of more complete and uniform regulations in order to maintain national unity and assure that the work goes forward efficiently and with uniform results. The labor movement is a part of the national economy and will be strengthened as a result of the decisions of the new administration.
