Trouble in Egypt.
The Appeal has been so accustomed to the calm of the past few days that it was with some consternation that we arrived at the stockyards yesterday afternoon. The man who took us there was not exactly calm, but was a bit alarmed. He said that there had been a disturbance in the city of Cairo, and that the people were in a state of excitement. The trouble was caused by the Egyptian government's decision to increase the price of bread, which was already high due to the war in Europe. The increase in the price of bread led to protests and demonstrations in the city, and there were reports of violence.

The Appeal is not inclined to take sides in this matter, but it is concerned about the welfare of the people of Egypt, who are already suffering greatly from the effects of the war. The Appeal hopes that a solution can be found to the problem of bread prices, which is causing such distress to the Egyptian people. The Appeal is also concerned about the international situation, and hopes that a peaceful solution can be found to the many conflicts that are currently taking place around the world. The Appeal believes that peace and prosperity are the goals that all people should strive for, and that working together is the best way to achieve these goals.
