The New York World of August 31, 1937, in a story that has been in the news recently, states that farmers have in this country lost more than the paper value of the silver bullion they have ever minted. The story goes on to say that the farmers have lost more than two million dollars in the past year, and that the farmers' total loss is estimated at $300,000,000. A paper farm has been defined as a farm where the farmer is engaged in the production of crops for sale. Other types of farms may include dairies, poultry farms, and market gardens. A paper farm is considered to be a loss-making enterprise because it is not profitable to produce crops for sale if the price of the crops is less than the cost of production. Farmers who have engaged in paper farms have lost money because of poor harvests, low prices, and high production costs. The article states that the farmers have lost more than two million dollars in the past year, and that the farmers' total loss is estimated at $300,000,000. This is a significant amount of money, and it is estimated that the farmers could have earned more than two million dollars if they had not been engaged in paper farms. The article goes on to say that the farmers' total loss is estimated at $300,000,000, which is a much larger amount than the two million dollars mentioned earlier. This suggests that the farmers have been losing money for a longer period of time than was previously thought. The article also states that the farmers have been losing money because of poor harvests, low prices, and high production costs. The farmers have been forced to sell their crops at a loss, which has resulted in a significant loss of money. This is a serious problem for the farmers, as it is difficult for them to make a profit when they are forced to sell their crops at a loss. The article suggests that the farmers could have earned more money if they had not been engaged in paper farms. However, the farmers have been forced to engage in paper farms in order to meet the demands of the market. The article states that the farmers have been losing money for a longer period of time than was previously thought, and that the farmers' total loss is estimated at $300,000,000.
