Squeezing the Small Business Man.

To the three years ending January 1, 1905, the stock of the United States declined 625 million. And, according to the figures of the Federal Reserve Bank, the amount of money in circulation at the end of 1904 was 57% higher than at the beginning of the year. The result has been that the cost of living has increased, and the prices of the goods of the small manufacturer have increased accordingly. As a result, the local business has not only been squeezed, but also by the larger manufacturers. The small manufacturer has been squeezed, and the cost of living has increased.

In the history of commerce in our country, the small manufacturer has always been squeezed. But the squeeze has been more severe in recent years. The squeeze has been more severe because the small manufacturer has not been able to keep up with the larger manufacturers. The small manufacturer has been squeezed, and the cost of living has increased.

The real difference.

In the famous speech of the apostle Paul, he said, "I can make all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are called according to his purpose." The real difference is that the small manufacturer has been squeezed, and the cost of living has increased.

In the three years ending January 1, 1918, the value of the cattle of the United States has increased about $6,000,000,000. This is an increase in the value of all cattle, not just the marketable ones. The value of cattle has declined. However, the number of cows has increased. The number of cows has increased by about 10% since 1915, while the number of marketable cows has increased by about 20%.
The Yellow Peril

You have noticed a good many heavy editorials in the newspapers. Some of these editorials are in favor of Americanizing the country, while others are against it. The latter are written by people who believe that Japan is the only country that can really be trusted to do anything for the good of the world. They say that Japan has the best educational system in the world, and that she is the only country that can teach our children how to think for themselves and to be free-minded. But I am afraid that you are giving too much heed to these editorials, and I wish I could persuade you to change your mind.

From a capitalistic point of view, there is real danger at this point. The modern nation that fights well has also the capacity to make things happen. Japan has rapidly absorbed industrial plants. When the war is over, Kuroda and his people will be able to do for them what they could not do during the war. Notwithstanding the fact that Japanese and American capitalists are in conflict, the latter will go to Paris and, under favorable terms, the entire, established Japanese industrial processes will be adopted by the American Japs, who are skilled in their business, and thus they will be able to compete with the American Japs.

This will take the shape of Japanese manufactured products going into the world markets in competition with American and European goods.

And here I must call your attention to another fact. The Japanese are not only the worst customers in the world, but they are also the worst creditors. The Japanese are not only the worst customers in the world, but they are also the worst creditors. They will not only pay their debts, but they will also get their money back. They will not only pay their debts, but they will also get their money back.

One of the paradoxes of the capitalist system is this: The greater the production, the lesser the demand. This is the result of the overproduction of capital goods. The result is that the world's market is overproduced. With Japan and China and Russia, with their millions of people, trying to get an equal share of the world's production of capital goods, the result is that the world's market is overproduced. The world's market is overproduced, and it will continue to be overproduced.

Shrewd capitalists have been complaining for some time. They say that the world's market is overproduced. They say that the world's market is overproduced. They say that the world's market is overproduced. They say that the world's market is overproduced. They say that the world's market is overproduced. They say that the world's market is overproduced. They say that the world's market is overproduced.
