At the Slave Trade

In America and Africa In 1805

The Free Contract in Africa

The African slave trade was a brutal and inhumane practice that lasted for centuries. In 1805, the United States and Great Britain signed the abolitionist treaty, the Free Trade Convention, which aimed to end the trade in human beings. This was a landmark moment in the fight against abolitionism and the end of slavery.

The treaty prohibited the capture, sale, and transportation of slaves from Africa. It also established a system of inspection and supervision to ensure that the slave trade was not occurring. The treaty was seen as a significant victory for anti-slavery forces and marked a turning point in the fight against the inhumanity of the slave trade.

The treaty was not without its critics, however. Some argued that it would not effectively end the slave trade, while others feared that it would lead to increased piracy in the region. Despite these challenges, the Free Trade Convention was a significant step forward in the fight against slavery.

The treaty was a testament to the power of international cooperation and the commitment of nations to working together to address pressing issues. The Free Trade Convention was a significant milestone in the fight against slavery and a step towards a more just and equitable world.

Women of the Modern Civilization

"BY THE STATUS OF ITS WOMEN MAY WE MEASURE A CIVILIZATION."

By JOSEPHINE CROSBY

"On the night I was last in London," says an English lady, "we could hear in the distance the music of the Maypole. "The Maypole," she said, "is a symbol of the liberty of the common people." {'

WIRELESS MESSAGES

From the Boer War to the Panama Canal, wireless messages have been a part of everyday life. The latest development is the use of wireless messages as a means of communication between ships and shore. In many cases, wireless messages are the only way to communicate with ships that are out of sight of land.

ARMY COLUMN

"A Letter From Home"

"My dear, dear son," the letter read, "I hope this finds you well. The war is going on, but I know you will do your best to help in any way you can. Your father and I are proud of you."

"Take good care of yourself and write soon."
