McParland & Co., Parsons, Kansas. May 30—Thirty-five years ago, a sentry stationed at the entrance to the town of Parsons, Kansas. The sentry was a vigilant officer, and he was able to report that all was quiet in the vicinity. He then entered the building where the gambler and murderer, JAKE MCLAUGHLIN, lived. MCLAUGHLIN was a gambler and a murderer who had escaped punishment for his crimes through the aid of James McParland twenty years ago.

The following is an account of the visit to the dark cellars and subterranean passages of the counterfeiter, gambler and murderer who escaped punishment for his crimes through the aid of James McParland twenty years ago:

Socialism the Remedy

This is the book that made the "socialistic" name of the '90s. It was written by a man who had been an active socialistic agitator in the United States. The book was published in New York in 1886.

Roosevelt's Efforts to Head Off Socialism.

The following editorial from a local paper in Pennsylvania is worth serious consideration and careful thought:

Mr. Roosevelt has no more power to control this country than a single drop of water to control the whole ocean. Twenty years ago we had no law against thus attempting to control the ocean. But it is not impossible that the ocean will some day have power to control the drop! Though true that the power may be in the hands of a dozen men, it is possible that the power of a million may actually be in the hands of the people. History is full of examples of this kind of thing.

The author of the editorial above is a true conservative. He believes in the working of the government by the people of the country, as it is now constituted. He believes in the free speech and free press, and he believes in the right of the people to control their own affairs. He believes in the working of the government by the people of the country, as it is now constituted. He believes in the free speech and free press, and he believes in the right of the people to control their own affairs. A Good Story.

There is a story told of a man who worked on a farm all his life. He was content with his lot and never sought to change it. One day, however, he heard of a man who had been successful in business and he decided to try his hand at it. He worked hard and finally succeeded. He then went back to his farm and told his family how happy he was. His wife said, "But what about the farm?" He replied, "The farm is just as good as ever. But now I can afford to think about other things."
