THE DOCTRINE of the DESTROYERS and THE REMEDY of the REDEEMERS

Truth Can Not Grow Out of Falsehood, Neither Can Justice Rest Upon Injustice.

The prevailing system of society rests upon the exploitation of the many who toil—the taking from them under the forms of law and custom, hourly with the things produced in the sweat of their faces. This is the fundamental injustice of present society and the fundamental lie of society. It can, society can no more escape the ill of this than a house resting upon a rotten foundation can resist settling and ultimate collapse. The panic which recently seized upon the financial centres and is now creeping like paralysis over the industrial body, extending gradually to all its extremities, is traceable directly to this vicious and fundamental robbery of the working class.

In discussing this vital question kid-gloved phrases are out of place. Plain words only can be of service. Present society, on the whole, consists of masters and slaves. There is no use mincing matters. We have had too much of that. He who is offended by the use of these words profits by the vicious fact they express and does not want the truth to be known. Beware of him, especially if he wears a silk hat, afflicts a pious look and is known as a philanthropist.

The masters, limited in number, practically own the country and the means of production. They get rich on profits, but produce nothing. The slaves, numbered by millions, work for wages, with the tools belonging to the masters. The wages paid the slaves will buy a fraction of what they produce. In other words, the masters have in that sense as much as was sold as chattel. The masters and the slaves are in a state of war.

In the consummation of the system, the masters have in possession of that portion of the national income which is produced by the slave labour. The masters are in possession of the national income, and this national income is in the possession of the masters. This national income is the income of the society, and the masters have in possession of the income of the society. This is what is meant by the masters owning the means of production.

The failures and bankruptcies, the reductions of working forces and wages are screened and covered up as much as possible by capitalist dailies to keep the truth from the people. This is the most vicious and sinful form of lying, and yet Capitalism, built upon wage-slavery and corner-stoned in falsehood, must be buttressed by falsehood; and to this extent the capitalist paper, which is simply the mouth of the capitalist, is justified in its lying propensity.

Capitalism, were the truth known to the whole people—especially to the working class who are robbed, most of them without knowing it, suffering without suspecting the cause—could not exist another day. But the fundamental falsehood has corrupted the whole system and weakened the entire physical and moral structure. The old fabric is shaking like a reed in the tempest, and every "panic" that results from its internal disorders, failing circulation and torpid extremities threatens to be its final consummation before it gives up the ghost and clears the way for Socialism, the historic successor of capitalism, adapted to modern forces and future needs and certain to express a civilization compared with which the society of this day will appear as archaic and barbarous.

Would you have this all-absorbing question presented to you from Alpha to Omega, including the Genesis of the Panic and its outcome, in clear, terse, scientific and readable form? Procure and read the next issue of the Appeal to Reason. It will be a special edition known as the "Panic Edition," and will be prepared with care and thoroughness by the most competent staff of writers at command. This issue will deal with basic causes and fundamental facts; with economic theory, social evolution and historic tendency. The "Panic Edition" will be a number of incomparable interest and historic value. Every citizen, and in fact every child old enough to know its letters, should read this issue, which will be one of the greatest, if not the greatest, in point of copies issued, in the world's history of journalism. Capitalism's ten million agencies are straining night and day to conceal the truth, to falsify the record, to pervert the facts, that the world may be kept in darkness and ignorance.

The voice of the Appeal and other organs of the new spirit and the coming civilization are appealing to the people not to listen and believe, but to read and think; not to blindly follow an idol, but to think and act for themselves. The Appeal is the voice of Truth crying in the wilderness. Thomas W. Lawson, the disgruntled capitalist stock-jobber, who only "speaks his pals" after they had his pelt out for a sign, has emitted a succession of roars but has not changed his spirit. His Indian-yell contributons are great advertisers—of Lawson, the only capitalist who can be trusted.

There is no difference between Lawson and Rockefeller except that Lawson got fairly and is now on exhibit, in a museum built of the folly of the people, as the only honest capitalist.

When you have withstood all of Lawson's gyrations and followed him through all his tortuous windings you find yourself just where you started. You simply followed a freak around the "vicious circle" of capitalism and find the exit placarded "up in the air."

The Appeal's "Panic Edition" will not be a mere tale of woe, but will deal scientifically with the constructive side of the question and show the way, the only way, to deal with the panic, and that is by abolishing the system that breeds it and thus putting an end to this blighting curse forever.

In the Swamps.

In the swamps, when we were standing on a small wharf, we noticed that the composition of the soil was a mixture of silt and water, which contained a great amount of alkaline action. The surface was a mixture of silt and sand, and there was a heavy layer of muck below. The water was quite cloudy, and at times it was almost black.

THE PINK SHREW.

I found the pink shrew, which is related to the pocket gopher, living in small burrows, about three feet from the shore, and when disturbed, it would dart into an adjacent burrow. It was a small rodent, with a short tail, and a short nose. It was covered with short, soft, brown fur. It was a nocturnal animal, and it was active at night.

ALTITUDE.

The altitude of the swamps was about two feet above sea level. The swamps were surrounded by a thick forest of cypress trees, and there was a dense growth of water hyacinth and water lilies.

THE PINK BEAK.

I found the pink beak, which is related to the pike, living in small streams, about ten feet from the shore, and when disturbed, it would dart into an adjacent burrow. It was a small fish, with a short body, and a short tail. It was covered with a smooth, pink skin. It was a nocturnal animal, and it was active at night.

Are you Big Enough to grum its significance? If you send a Big Contribution to the Appeal, $1,500,000 names in the near future. Others will help—will you?

And a Democratic Administration in 1894.

"It is in evidence and undeniable, that no violence or disorder was committed by the citizens of Buffalo, by any protest against the action of the Federal Government.

The federal troops were not needed. The local authorities had control of the situation and there was no need for the federal troops to be called out.
